Freedom a Joy for David Jones

By ED GOULD
Times Staff

"I would like to thank the newspaper. My family thanks them too."

Those were the emotional words of David Jones, 18, who is home with his wife and children today, thanks to the generosity of an anonymous Saanich widow who paid for his release from Wilkinson road jail after reading of his plight in a Times article by John Mika Thursday.

"Home" is a two-bedroom shack on the Malahat reserve near Mill Bay which David and his wife and two children share with his wife's grandmother.

There was no welcome home party. And after Victoria lawyer J. Alan Bond, who represented the anonymous donor, left him there at 6 p.m. Friday, the glow of being free after 13 days in jail soon wore off.

David said today he is jobless, has no plans for the future, is unwelcome on the reserve because he is a Nanaimo Indian — and the Nanaimos are traditional enemies of the Malahats — and he's broke.

The only money in the house today was what David brought home with him, the 20 cents an hour earned "building things" at Wilkinson Road.

He plans to sell the 1959 Ford he bought for $133 — the car that landed him in trouble in the first place.

VISITED JAIL

Unable to pay for the new no-fault insurance and unable to get a licence, he wound up in jail after the car slipped its brake and backed into another parked vehicle in a Victoria shopping centre parking lot. Damage was $30.

He phoned his mother, Mrs. Virginia Casey, in Seattle and she promised, after visiting him in jail here, to try to raise some money to free him.

A brother, Harold Jones, 20, lives on Songhees reserve. He promised to pitch in too, but it would be difficult because a new baby had just been born and he was only working part-time.

The freedom money became unnecessary when the anonymous widow made her appearance on the scene. What David Jones wants now is a job to support himself and his family.

Born on a Nanaimo reserve, David went to Seattle with his mother when his parents broke up. His mother later remarried a non-Indian American and David attended school in Seattle until old enough to leave. He returned to Canada three years ago.

PICKING BERRIES

During a summer job of picking berries in Washington he met Ann. Later, he learned the girl had given birth to a baby boy, and he returned to Malahat to marry her.

It was a rocky marriage at the start. David admits he couldn't settle down, drank a lot, and was constantly in minor troubles with the police.

Ironically, the latest and most serious charge, came almost a year to the day from the time he gave up drinking. "He hasn't had a drink in a year and he sure has had lots of offers," his wife confirmed.

Ann has had a similarly difficult childhood. Her mother died last year, leaving her with seven brothers and sisters ranging in age from three to 15, as well as her own children, to look after.

The only time the couple ever saw a welfare official was when they arrived to take Ann's brothers and sisters away. They are now all together "and quite happy" in a non-Indian foster home in Duncan. "They come home on holidays," Ann said.

David said he would move off the reserve to take a job.

"I'll go anywhere and do anything," he said.

"I haven't much experience. The longest job I could get was at Mayo sawmill in Nanaimo and that was one day a week. I been fishing and picking fruit."

Political Isolation Irks the West

By PETER C. NEWMAN

Newman

They have sat there every night for 10 years now, the people of the three prairie provinces, watching the eleven o'clock news, and their nervous systems have been strained strained beyond endurance. The nightly procession of Canadian newsmakers have been interminably engaged with what Quebec wants and doesn't want, and nobody ever mentions the West. No wonder a farmer in southern Saskatchewan recently fired a shotgun into his own TV set as a hapless Liberal MP was trying to explain his government's policy on wheat sales.

The anonymous marksman was expressing in his own way the sense of frustration which has reached crisis proportions across much of western Canada.

Like the meeting and marrying of many drops of rain sliding along a wire to form one huge gusher, the various discontents felt by westerners have comined into a political force that must be taken into account in working out the delicate equations of our national future.

The roots of western dissatisfaction stretch back to the turn of the century when the western territories stuck the bargains that brought them into confederation.

Tariffs, freight rates and wheat sales were the issues then (as they are now), but during most of the first 50 years, the west at least felt that its complaints were being heard and that it possessed the political clout to make Ottawa sit up and listen.

Until the late fifties, national attention was focussed on the prairies and British Columbia with discoveries of the huge petroleum and gas fields, the carving out of the aluminium city at Kitimat, the building of the trans-Canada pipeline, the emergence of giant forest product complexes and discoveries of rich new mineral wealth.

But during the sixties, the focus of national concern shifted almost entirely to Ontario, where the nation's industrial future was being moulded, and to Quebec, where the struggle for national unity was being fought.

The West began to feel a deepening sense of isolation from the centres of national decision-making.

This mood of irrelevance grew particularly bitter after the defeat of John Diefenbaker and his prairie pro-consul, Alvin Hamilton.

Lester Pearson's Liberals never found—or searched very hard for—a prairie politician who could champion the western cause, and in the four general elections fought under Pearson's leadership, the Liberals won only six of the 192 prairie seats where they ran candidates.

It looked for a while as if this estrangement would end when Pierre Trudeau became the Liberal leader, and the three prairie provinces gave him 11 seats in the 1968 election.

But it now appears that the West misunderstood Trudeau's message.

JONES FUND GROWS

Everyone Wanted to Help

By JOHN MIKA

David Jones is free because many Victorians felt they were their "brother's keeper".

The 18-year-old father of two returned to his family after the supper hour Thursday after a race developed among donors to spring him from the Wilkinson Road jail.

The race was won by an anonymous Saanich widow who donated the outstanding balance of $252 of his sentence of three months in lieu of $285 in fines for two Motor Vehicle Act infractions Jan. 3.

Jones had already served 13 days of the term he began because he could not afford the fines levied for driving without the new compulsory auto insurance coverage and without a licence.

The Times and John Howard Society of Vancouver Island had organized a fund only hours before his release in response to an unexpected wave of callers. They phoned following publication of Jones' plight as an example of provincial laws which produce a systematic jailing of persons too poor to pay fines immediately and usually without any legal help for their confrontation with the prosecutor.

TWO LAWYERS

Before the edition announcing the fund had been distributed several individuals and organizations apparently had decided they would pay the fines themselves.

At least two lawyers acting on behalf of separate clients became involved in the race to release Jones and the London Boxing Club also joined it independently.

It was won by J. Alan Bond, a lawyer acting on behalf of an anonymous Saanich widow.

Lawyer Lloyd MacKenzie, acting on behalf of Mrs. Margaret Salt, 6469 Welch, was only a few minutes behind and the London Boxing Club's offer to pay the fines came shortly later. There were indications of other independent attempts but details were not known.

Bond drove Jones to his home on the Malahat Reserve after his release.

NO RECOMPENSE

John Howard Society executive director Michael Bennett offered to re-imburse the anonymous widow from the new-born public fund but Bond said she did not wish any recompense.

Meanwhile, the David Jones Fund continued growing, but at a slower pace, today even

Tariffs Said Bar To B.C. Growth

Province Potential Pacesetter

By ALAN WHITE

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Liberals were told Friday their province can set the pace for the development of the nation.

But first they must shake off trade and development restrictions resulting from federal policies, delegates to the three-day provincial Liberal convention here were told.

Speeches by both provincial leader Dr. Pat McGeer and by federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis, MP for Capilano in North Vancouver, pointed the way to free trade and burgeoning development of B.C.

Mr. Davis said this province is the fastest-growing area in Canada and can set the pace for national growth as well as lend a style to the rest of the country.

He suggested an end to tariffs which protect Eastern Canadian industries but drive up prices in B.C. and impede industrial development.

IMPOSE HIGHER COSTS

The tariffs impose higher costs on developers here and "militate against greater mechanization and higher productivity . . . against further processing of our resources," Mr. Davis said.

Dr. McGeer said tariff barriers on most goods brought into Canada or shipped out "raise the prices for western consumers . . . and inhibit western manufacturing."

The solution, he suggested, is free trade for North America to give industry in B.C. better prices and thus a boost to development plans. It would also force Eastern Canadian industry to become more competitive.

"The west is undergoing its own quiet revolution," Dr. McGeer said. "It is the massive expansion of resource development and a thrust for manufacturing industry to complement it."

Dr. McGeer earlier said proposals in the federal white paper on taxation might aggravate the problem by cutting into development funds in the province.

MAY DEFLECT CAPITAL

The capital gains provisions of the white paper could deflect much-needed capital away from Canada, limiting the province's ability to compete in world markets.

"We do not have the protective tariffs of the industries of Eastern Canada," Dr. McGeer said. "We have got to hack it abroad."

Delegates punctuated his criticisms of tariff barriers to western development with loud applause.

WEATHER MILDER —LIGHT SNOW GONE

Temperatures will creep higher in Greater Victoria Sunday while the rest of the west shivers in a cold snap.

A touch of snow was reported in scattered districts locally today and the Gonzales weather office reported some freezing rain.

For Sunday the forecast is continued overcast and rain. The temperature will dip close to freezing tonight but climb to 40 Sunday.

Elsewhere, temperatures ranged to 45 below, establishing record lows at numerous points in Alberta and Saskatchewan. Prospects are dim for any moderation until after the current below-zero spell completes its second week.

A sample of overnight lows across the west:

Winnipeg, minus 35; Saskatoon, minus 41; Medicine Hat, minus 45; Calgary, minus 28 and Edmonton, minus 40.

Millionaire Leaves And Cheques Bounce

Times News Services

SCARSDALE, N.Y.—Millionaire Michael James Brody Jr. made a break for it today, leaving behind hundreds of fund-seekers. Many spent the night in freezing temperatures outside his Manhattan office.

As word spread that the 21-year-old oleomargarine heir had left — the guess was he was headed for a Caribbean island — the president of the Scarsdale National Bank and Trust Co. confirmed reports that Brody's chequing account balance was not sufficient to cover his cheque-writing activities of Friday.

A television newsman, Peter Simmons, who jokingly asked for $1,000, and got such a cheque, was told later by a bank officer they could not honor the cheque "at this time."

On Thursday, Brody first told the world that he had $25 million to give away and within hours the gold rush was on. He was besieged by visitors, telephone callers and telegrams requesting a piece of the action.

The telephone at Brody's rented $400,000 home here, whose number he took pains to publicize, has been changed to an unlisted number.

On Friday, Brody and his bride of 11 days, Renee, wandered around New York, passing out money to those who caught his fancy.

Requests ranged from cash to buy a helicopter to $25 to pay for a month's grazing for a horse.

Joseph Cassella, a "professional dynamite blaster", drove all night from Weirton, W. Va., to ask for $1 million. He said he needed the money to build a pig-iron melting plant that would provide jobs for Weirton.

ORONSAY TO SAIL NEAR VICTORIA

The luxury liner Oronsay is expected to be in Victoria waters about noon Sunday.

Oronsay, tied up in Vancouver since Thursday, while health officials sought to find the source of an outbreak of typhoid, is due to return to that port before dark Sunday.

She is scheduled to cast off about 8 a.m. but it is not expected that the cruise ship will dock in Victoria.

Latest word on the typhoid infection is that two crew members, at first believed to be carriers of the disease, are actually suffering from what appears to be typhoid.

Earlier, health officials said the seamen were not ill but that tests had showed they were infected with typhoid. A carrier transmits the disease to others, but doesn't have typhoid symptoms.

Canadian Unity Vital: McGeer

VANCOUVER (CP)—Liberals must fight for unity both provincially and nationally, Dr. Pat McGeer, British Columbia Liberal leader, said today.

At the same time, western Liberals must avoid a hint of separatism in their demands for a better deal in Confederation, he told 400 delegates on the final day of a three-day B.C. Liberal convention here.

"It is said there is a feeling of alienation in Western Canada," Dr. McGeer said.

"Much is made of discontent in the Prairie provinces where there is a belief that Ottawa cannot or will not recognize their special economic problems.

"I say this to separatists in Quebec and the West—forget your separatism and start to work for Canada," he said.

"We cannot build a country if our way of expressing disagreement with the policies of the day is to shout separatism."

REPORTS 'DISTURBING'

Dr. McGeer also said he has been "much disturbed about recent strange discussions between some provincial Liberals in Alberta and the Alberta Social Credit administration."

His remarks were a reference to recent reports that Alberta Liberals were considering joining up with the Social Credit government of Premier Harry Strom.

In an earlier speech Dr. McGeer said Liberals were the only political group represented both federally and provincially in every province and thus uniquely suited to deal with national problems.

Today, he reiterated that B.C. Liberals must work for a united party and for solutions to problems facing all levels of government.

"There must be a political party in this country—it would be better if there could be more than one—that is prepared to put Canada first and leave no doubt about it," he said.

In B.C., Liberals also had the dominant aim of striving to replace the Social Credit government as the alternative to "socialism as a way of government for this province."

A copy of his speech was released in advance of delivery.

Grits Told Aid to Poor Investment in People

VANCOUVER (CP) — A poor-peoples' lawyer, who says a marketing approach to poverty may be what is needed to stimulate the business community's interest in the problem, was supported here Friday by Consumer Affairs Minister Ron Basford.

The lawyer, Michael Harcourt provides legal aid to the needy of Vancouver for the Inner City Services project. He told a Liberal party policy conference that a new attitude toward the problem of the poor is needed.

"Maybe we should take a market approach and look at it as a capital investment in human beings," said Mr. Harcourt. "From an investment in people there is going to be a return back over a period of years."

He said this was better than pouring millions of dollars "down the drain with no return."

MINISTER AGREES

Mr. Basford said he agreed with Mr. Harcourt.

"Solving problems of poverty is far more than a question of dollars and cents. It is a problem of laws we have in our land and marketing and merchandising practices in Canada and North America. I see time and again laws that are totally antiquated to help the poor and where the harshness of them falls on the poor."

Mr. Basford said the federal Small Loans Act, bankruptcy Act, Bills of Exchange Act and Interest Act all are in need of revision and changes are being drafted.

"Day after day poor people signed promisory notes for house repairs that aren't carried out, sign notes for used cars that aren't worth a damn, and I'm introducing amendments at this session to correct that," he said.

"I'm sure that when I've introduced amendments to the Bills of Exchange Act, Interest Act and the others the business community will come to me and say I am being to radical, too progressive. But these are the kinds of laws the business community should be supporting," he said.

Carl Nickel Heads Douglas Scouts

Carl Nickel has been elected president of the Douglas District Council of Boy Scouts.

Other officers elected were: Mrs. Catherine Morse, vice-president; Mrs. N. Kachaluba, secretary; Mrs. M. Bown, treasurer; Mrs. P. Caton, badges; Peter Griffiths, camp representative; Henry Freio, special events; T. Wallis, hall committee.

Re-appointed on the uniform staff were district commissioner Herb Bown; assistant district commissioner Robert Cato; Ray Kachaluba, A.D.C. Scouts; Andy Jensen, A.D.C. cubs.

Poor to Meet Politicians On Monday

Executive members of the Victoria Low-Income Group will meet Opposition Leader David Barrett and local MLAs Monday at 3:45 p.m. in their campaign to oust Welfare Minister Philip Gaglardi from office.

Vice-president Mrs. Walter Olszewski said today, "As minister Mr. Gaglardi has a responsibility to present the total picture. He hasn't done that. He just carried on labelling us all deadbeats and no-goods."

Mrs. Olszewski said her group was concerned about the discrimination caused by amendments brought in by Gaglardi.

"He has enforced a ruling that makes welfare recipients who have part-time jobs have forms filled in by their employer which state the exact money he or she pays them.

"This not only means that Mr. Gaglardi thinks that welfare recipients can't be trusted to give a true statement of their earnings; it also strips them of their pride completely. When they have any job at all they can hold their head a little higher."

She said the ruling also resulted in discrimination from some employers.

"Lots of welfare recipients now working stand to be fired. I know one girl whose employer, when asked to complete the form, said she'd never have hired her if she had known she was on welfare. She said she only kept her on because she was a good worker and must be an exception to the rule."

CALL FOR ACTION

Things came to a head Friday at a meeting of the group when a motion was passed calling for action to have Gaglardi removed from office.

One woman said that instead of using the tag of deadbeat for welfare recipients, the minister could save money by making deserting husbands support their families.

"The real deadbeats of our society are the men who have left their families and thumb their noses at those who say they should support their children.

though donors were specifically informed in person that Jones already was released.

The fund hit about $150 Thursday evening and there was a likelihood that it would double that amount by Monday morning's mail delivery.

Bennett said the first call on the fund will be for any further help needed by the Jones' family because David still needs a job and his wife Ann is pregnant.

He said the society will dispatch a staff member Monday to visit the family and determine what it can do to help them re-establish a normal life.

Bennett said that anyone wishing to help in that effort can send a donation to add to the David Jones Fund although it was not being continued in view of the release. Any residue from the fund would go into a special project being launched by the society to help Indians in court.

"I must add that I am very gratified with the response from so many directions within Greater Victoria that shows people here do feel they are their brothers' keepers," commented Bennett.

"Now that David Jones' situation has been alleviated, I hope that the others in the same plight from time to time are not forgotten and Victorians will continue to exercise their social concern by helping our organization or others through membership or donations."

11-Country Trip Ends For Agnew

HONOLULU (AP) — Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew is back on U.S. soil after a 32,000-mile trip that took him halfway across Asia to tell leaders of 11 countries that the United States plans to maintain its Pacific commitments.

Hula dancers gave Agnew the traditional Hawaiian welcome as he arrived here late Friday after an eight-hour flight across the South Pacific. He had left Auckland, New Zealand, this morning, crossing the international dateline en route.

Agnew, his wife and staff planned two days of relaxation at a resort hotel before heading back to Washington. He plans to leave Honolulu early Monday and arrive in Washington that night.

Agnew left Auckland declaring U.S. intentions of maintaining its course in Vietnam after two days of the most persistent anti-American protests of his entire Asian tour.

Except for Friday night, when police cleared the street, the protesters remained outside Agnew's hotel for virtually all of his 42-hour stay.

By this morning, about three dozen were back, chanting "one-two-three-four, kick out Agnew, stop the war," and as the vice-president's motorcade left the hotel for the airport, they switched to "don't come back, don't come back, don't come back."

Victorian Jailed For Trafficking

VANCOUVER (CP) — David Ralph Creed, 20, of Victoria was sentenced Friday to 12 months in jail for possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking.

Creed was arrested last May 31 when he arrived by bus from Seattle with 13 ounces of marijuana hidden on his person.

Biafra Aid Airlift Under Way

LAGOS (Reuters) — The first post-war foreign relief plane bringing supplies to what once was Biafra was on its way to Lagos today.

The British plane, carrying seven jeeps and 11 tons of medical supplies, left an airport near London early this morning. Its flight has been authorized by the Nigerian government.

But Nigeria today refused to let the International Red Cross Committee use a Danish-registered plane to fly in relief supplies because of its country of origin.

Nigeria Friday had authorized two relief flights into Lagos next week on behalf of the committee. The second aircraft, which is Swiss-registered, is due to arrive here Tuesday with 11 tons of medicines.

Doctors Aid In Battle On Inflation

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Medical Association is asking doctors to put off fee increases "for the duration of the present emergency," Dr. R. M. Matthews, the association president, said Friday.

Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba and Nova Scotia divisions were planning to revise fee schedules this year.

Dr. Matthews said the 21,000-member association is asking divisions to put off increases as an anti-inflation measure.

"We are advising them this is a time that calls for restraint," he told a news conference after talks Wednesday with Finance Minister Edgar Benson and Health Minister John Munro.

On the way home Friday afternoon, David tried to find out from the lawyer who his benefactor was so he could thank her personally.

"He just kept telling me he couldn't say who she was. I sure would like to thank her."

Medalist Is Praised

MILL BAY — A former Brentwood College student who won the governor-general's silver medal for B.C. demonstrated talent in all areas, the college headmaster, David McKenzie, said Friday.

William Holmes, 18, now in first year in the faculty of science at UBC, was presented with the medal in a special ceremony at the college. Education Minister Donald Brothers attended the presentation.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Moister air spread to the lower mainland overnight bringing cloudy skith and a few snow flurries to southwestern B.C. Some cloud also spread into the southernn Interior but other parts of the province remained clear and very cold. Coldest temperatures were in the central Interior where Prince George was 41 below this morning.

Another surge of moist and slightly milder air is expected over southwestern B.C. Sunday with a new Pacific storm. Skies will remain cloudy and occasional rain or wet snow will accompany the system. Snow will also spread eastward into the southern Interior later in the day. Central and northern areas, however, will continue to be clear and very cold.

By CARL RIBLET JR.

The average owner of a small farm in Russia is not as strong and active physically as farmers in warmer climates. Information about the Russians, obtained in exchanges of statistics, gives as the reason for not-so-tough Russian muscles the weather in Russia.

The ground in the colder regions of Russia is frozen more than five months of the year. The farmer can't work then, so he stays in his house with his family and takes it easy and soaks in the heat and puts on the fat.

When the ground finally melts, he then gets going in a big way and has to work like the devil to get the plowing, seeding and tilling done while he is in relatively soft physical condition. The work is so tough for the Russian softie that on the average he can only take care of 10-acres, which is quite a contrast with the U.S. average of 70.

Student Pub Serves Beer Friday Only

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two hundred Simon Fraser University students quaffed the first legal beer on the suburban Burnaby campus when a student pub was opened Friday.

The pub will operate in one section of a student cafeteria every Friday, student president Norm Wickstrom said.

A banquet liqour permit must be obtained for it each Friday.

Liberalized Abortion Unlikely In Current Session—Stanfield

By BOB MITCHELL

There were groans from a crowd of more than 300 University of Victoria students Friday when Progressive Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield told them there is little hope of liberalized abortion legislation during the current parliamentary session.

In answer to a question on where the party stood on the abortion question, Stanfield said:

"In view of the difficulty the government has had with the Criminal Code changes I don't see any prospect of a bill coming before Parliament in the near future.

"I'm certainly not prepared to go as far as was suggested at UBC yesterday, that the choice is the choice of the women involved."

The students expressed dissatisfaction at Stanfield's answer, and as they pressed him for an explanation he said:

"I'm certainly not prepared to support the view that it's a question of personal choice."

Students fired questions at the Tory leader for about one hour after he gave a brief speech in the lounge of the Student Union Building.

A question on the legalization of marijuana brought this response:

"I would be surprised if there wasn't any change in the law this year."

NOT OPPOSED

Stanfield also indicated he does not oppose development of chemical and biological weapons at a government testing station near Medicine Hat.

"I don't think they (the government) are arguing that weapons are not being developed. I think they're arguing that they're developing defensive weapons if the people of Canada ever come under attack from chemical weapons."

"Attack from who," shouted several students.

Stanfield said sale of materials to the United States to be used in the Vietnam war does not compromise Canada's image as a peaceful nation.

"I don't think it would serve the slightest interest for us to refuse to sell materials that are used in Vietnam.

"If we were to do this we would be regarded by many people in the United States as stabbing them in the back."

CHARGEX ADS 'QUESTIONABLE'

Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield said Friday that advertisements for Chargex credit cards may have been "questionable" and "ill conceived" but he doubted that excessive consumer demand is a cause of current inflation in Canada.

Stanfield said the timing of introduction of Chargex was unfortunate but noted that the Economic Council of Canada has found no evidence that excessive consumer demands are contributing to inflation.

The Conservative leader told an afternoon press conference that wage and price controls are not acceptable to him as an inflation-fighting method at the present time.

"They lead to a managed control," he said. "It's very economy under government rough justice . . . and the longer it goes on, the rougher and more rigid it gets," he said of government control.

Voluntary acceptance of wage and price guidelines should be given a thorough test, Stanfield said.

In other remarks, he said he doubts that the future of the provincial Conservative party is closely related to that of the Social Credit party.

He had been asked what he thought of provincial leader John de Wolf's suggestions that the provincial party should keep in close touch with the Socreds.

Stanfield said it is up to the provincial party to run its own affairs. He described de Wolf as a "highly intelligent man" and compared his task to that of Alberta Conservative leader Peter Lougheed, who has put the party there in "a position of growing strength."

Asked if the federal party might take a hand in reviving the provincial Tories, Stanfield replied:

"No, I don't think so. I think it would be an intrusion bound to fail . . . for the federal party to try to intervene and direct the operation of the provincial party."

'Lennon Stay Away' Drive Set

WINNIPEG (CP) — A Winnipeg businessman said Friday he will launch a newspaper write-in campaign against the proposed visit of Beatle John Lennon and his wife Yoko Ono to Manitoba next summer.

Manitoba's New Democratic Party government last month invited the Lennons to take part in the province's centennial celebrations by bringing their peace movement to Manitoba.

"Surely the government must know that he will not be a good example for our youth," handbag manufacturer Lech Fulmyk said in an interview.

"I think the government should withdraw its invitation."

Fulmyk said he would place advertisements in Winnipeg newspapers next week, containing mail-in coupons for people who share his views.

He said he expects about 5,000 newspaper readers will sign and mail in the coupons.

Trafficker Jailed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Ronald Soo of Vancouver was sentenced to 10 years in jail Thursday when he appeared in provincial court on a charge of possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

Council Grants Aid Summer Fair

Two Canada Council grants have been announced in connection with the musical program for this summer's Victoria Fair.

One will sponsor a brilliant young Canadian pianist, Robert Rogers, as artist-in-residence at University of Victoria. He will appear in recital and in chamber music programs during the first half of July.

The second grant commissions a new work to be premiered in the season and goes to Derek Healey, a British composer who joined Uvic's music faculty last fall.

Let Our Stand Be Clear

THE CURRENT FURORE about linking sales of Canadian oil to the United States with proposals for sharing other Canadian sources of energy—presumably water or water power—or even of compromising Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic, is a measure of the seriousness with which the Canadian people regard such an infringement by the United States of their material or political entity. In revealing that he is willing to discuss such topics with the United States, Resources Minister J. J. Greene has placed himself in a very delicate position and Canadians, through letters and other forms of communication, should provide Mr. Greene with all the backbone which he will require in dealing with the United States government. He has not yet, in his public utterances, given that unequivocal assurance of "Canada first" which Canadians would like to hear in so vital a matter.

It is in confrontations such as the one now shaping up that the whole concept of Canadian identity will be determined for the future. Our close association, both geographical and economic, with a friendly giant imbues ministerial actions and words with special significance. Neither Prime Minister Trudeau nor Mr. Greene should leave any trace of doubt as to their unswerving dedication to the national policy which Canadians so obviously desire.

It would be the utmost folly to bargain away any vestige of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic, or any equity in our water resources, in return for export concessions to a single industry such as oil—particularly when this resource is already so heavily dominated by United States ownership and control.

Mr. Greene says he would enter into no commitments or agreements respecting our resources except with regard to those which are surplus to Canadian needs, present or future. Since obviously Canada's future needs have not yet been assessed, and equally clearly are literally limitless in extent, Mr. Greene can have little to talk about with Washington. He should hold out no hope to the United States that tempting trade offers can alter the basic policy on which hangs Canada's future as an independent and prosperous country.

What fundamentally is involved here is the conflict between the national policy, whereby Canadian resources should be held and developed as the means whereby Canada will enjoy a future as a sovereign, viable national entity; and the continental policy, which holds that all the resources of North America should be considered as a unit to be developed for the benefit of the continent as a whole.

What the latter concept would mean in practice is that Canadian resources—and particularly pure water—would become fully integrated with those of the United States. And this means in effect that they would disappear into the industrial complex of our vast neighbor and we would cease to exist as an economic entity. The theory of continental resources is a logical one only if we are prepared to make geography the deciding factor in whether there should be a Canada or not. Canadians feel that there are other factors of tradition, history, culture and destiny which should be given precedence and not eventually eliminated by the surrender of our natural assets.

In any case, contemplation of the exploitation, waste, destruction and pollution which American conservationists assert have marked the United States' development of its natural resources gives no encouragement to any belief that our great neighbor to the south can administer our heritage of natural wealth any better than we can ourselves.

No Money for Health

FOR TWO YEARS RUNNING Premier Bennett has said that health is the government's number one priority, but actions speak louder than words. Health Minister Loffmark says no provincial money is available for hiring health department food inspectors, yet a senior spokesman, the chief health officer, Dr. Whitbread, warns that an epidemic of food poisoning on Southern Vancouver Island could occur due to lack of adequate inspection staff. He says five health inspectors should be hired immediately.

Inspections of restaurants and food stores have been reduced to a minimum and some restaurants are not being checked at all. The situation has reached a point where the health board is reportedly assigning inspectors paid by Greater Victoria to work in neighboring municipalities that are provincial responsibilities. This has caused Victoria's finance committee unanimously to endorse a recommendation that the city pull out of the Greater Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health.

Mr. Loffmark defends the tight grip on provincial purse strings with typical logic: "Until we see the upper limits of these costs we are going to have to hold all our medical and health costs somewhere near the existing level of service." When existing resources will not provide fundamental services such as food inspection, then something is seriously lacking in Health Department policy.

Echoes of Inflation

VOLUNTARY ECONOMIC RE-straints and manipulation of the money supply may have slowed inflation slightly but there are no signs at present that the Canadian economy will avoid further inflation in 1970. The consumer price index, based on 1961 prices equalling 100 jumped from 126.8 in October to 127.4 in November, compared with 121.9 in November of 1968.

Finance Minister Benson does not think Canada will face a recession this year; he looks forward to "moderate expansion" in 1970. Unemployment rose 40,000 between October and November of last year indicating that anti-inflationary measures were having some effect. But in view of statements by the Canadian Labor Congress and the Confederation of National Trade Unions rejecting a program of voluntary price and wage restraint, Mr. Benson's hope for moderation may be optimistic.

Prime Minister Trudeau has promised stronger measures in February if inflation continues unabated and he has not ruled out formal controls on wages and prices. Any break in Canada's inflation will depend in part, however, on the inflationary psychology in the United States. Signs are not hopeful there. The food-price index of the United States Department of Labor increased five per cent between January and October of this year. A new automobile costs on the average $107 more. Perhaps the Nixon administration's policy of gradually cooling down the United States economy has backfired. If this proves true in 1970 the result will certainly be felt through the Canadian economy.

Cash Customers Pay

The letter of Mr. A. de Goutiere on Chargex in last Monday's edition calls for further comment. This merchant must be an exception if he has not absorbed the cost of Chargex by adding a cent here and a couple of cents there on to the former price of his merchandise. It is my opinion that the consumer pays for the cost of all credit buying and, unfortunately, it is the cash paying customer who subsidizes it without any benefit.

There are thousands no doubt in the Greater Victoria area who are on a fixed income and who cannot afford credit buying. They save, shall we say, for ten months to buy an article for cash rather than buy it on credit and have to make the same saving for 12 months. Their budget is just that stringent. Again there are many who were taught throughout their upbringing to pay cash, to owe no man, and to help in that way to fight inflation. Is the merchant being just and fair to these people? I think not. There was a time when the cash paying customer received a discount of up to 10 per cent. How about a sign just below the Chargex sign — "5 per cent discount to cash paying customers". This would mean the most "instant" cash to the merchant. Will they do it? Will you Mr. de Goutiere? — N. J. Calverley, 170 Cedar Cross Road.

FROM UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.

By WILLIAM R. FRYE

Biafra—Back to the Basics of Human Rights

THE collapse of Biafra this past week left the world with one less war but no fewer problems. The most obvious and difficult problem was to heal the grievous wounds — physical and mental — that had been inflicted on the Nigerian nation. The Nigerians are showing extreme sensitivity to suggestions that they cannot do this job themselves. Probably they cannot; but this is not the point. They do not want to appear to be wards or charity cases — certainly not of outsiders who, during the war, sympathized with the secession and, in Lagos' eyes, helped prolong it.

Frye

One result has been the spectacle, this past week, of Nigerian officials telling the world to relax, that food distribution will be handled by the government, that "a little time" is needed to make arrangements.

This was all very well, of course, except that un-numbered thousands, perhaps even millions, may have passed the point of no return for starvation as time passed. But Lagos did not appear to share the world's sense of urgency.

It is pointless now to try to assign moral responsibility for Nigeria's unspeakable tragedy between the central government, which used medieval methods of siege warfare, and the secessionists, who repeatedly rejected peace overtures because a sacrifice of potential sovereignty was involved.

No one comes out of this experience with any notable glory — certainly not the Organization of African Unity, which failed in its mediation efforts; nor Britain, France and the Soviet Union, which fed weapons to the two sides in a competition for influence; nor the UN, a peace organization which looked the other way.

Perhaps the United States, which kept hands largely off, emerged with the least onus; but this was at best a negative achievement.

Secession Anathema

The fact which few took sufficiently into account, and which will have to guide future policy toward Africa, is that secession is an anathema to most Africans. Next to white supremacy, it is probably, to them, the single most objectionable concept in the language.

The world outside Africa should have learned this lession in the Katanga case, but apparently did not. At unbelievable cost, a new warning now has been written into the pages of contemporary history. Africa is determined not to be "balkanized."

This is, in considerable part, a simple matter of pride. African leaders wish to demonstrate that they are capable of maintaining the territorial integrity of the countries they inherited from the white colonists. Things are not going to go to pot because that would imply that Blacks are less capable of governing than whites.

Had this not been so, there might have been much logic to a separate nation of Ibo tribesmen. The Ibos are an advanced, able people, capable of hard work, and highly individualistic.

Breakaway Bandwagon

But their breakaway could have begun the disintegration not merely of Nigeria, the most populous state of Africa, but of other African countries which are similar confederations of loosely associated people.

Once started, such a bandwagon might not have stopped until scores of tribal ministries had been created across the map of Africa, most of them a lot less viable than Biafra. There could have been at least a generation of warfare to suppress such secessions.

This was why the Organization of African Unity never was willing to frame a basis for peace negotiation that Biafra's leaders would accept. It was why Africans objected to peace moves by the UN, where resistance to secession was considered less firm and where, as a result, some compromise giving Biafra a dangerous measure of autonomy might have emerged.

But if secessionist tendencies are to be successfully discouraged in the future, it cannot be done wholly with the gun. It must be done by fuller guarantees of human rights to minorities — and this, too, is a major lesson of the Biafran tragedy.

Had the Ibos been accorded rights and opportunities which in many countries, are considered normal, there might never have been a war.

Jobs commensurate with their skills; personal security in hostile parts of the country; opportunities for greater influence in the central government — these are some of the rights which, at times, were denied to the Ibos, and which must now be restored if there is to be future stability.

Human Rights

War and similar upheaval can often be traced to a denial of human rights. The Communists in Vietnam might never have gained a foothold if the Diem regime had not repressed its political and religious foes. The Bay of Pigs, and Fidel Castro himself, might never have happened if Batista had not sown the seeds of fury.

"Is not peace," President Kennedy once asked, "in the last analysis basically a matter of human rights?" The truth of this remark was never clearer than it has been this past week.

FROM TORONTO

Ontario Asks How Much More University It Can Afford

THE latest report of the Committee on University Affairs to the Ontario government is a sobering document which raises for the first time the question of just how much university this province can afford. The Committee does not come out flatly and say Ontario must ease off its current intense commitment to university education. That, perhaps, would be too abrupt a switch for the body politic to take, conditioned and determined as it is to equate a university degree with the Holy Grail. But it does draw a very gloomy picture of escalating costs in the next five years and in effect asks the taxpayers if they want to carry on.

Greer

Since 1964, when the current program was launched with the appointment of the Committee as a semi-autonomous agency to distribute government grants, university enrolment in the province has climbed from 49,303 to 104,263 full-time students. Government grants for capital expansion have increased from $45.6 millions in 1964-65 to $141.7 millions in the current academic year, while grants for operating expenses have increased from $45.7 millions to $262.6 millions.

Rapid Increases

The next five years, according to the Committee, will show more of the same. Although population statistics indicate a decline in the rate of increase of the university-age sector, there will be a rapid increase in enrolments as more and more of those old enough to go decide to go; by 1974-75, there should be about 160,000 students enrolled. This will require at least another $181 millions, calculated just at current prices, to provide spaces for them.

What the operating expenses will be in five years depends on several factors: whether the government changes the components of its grants formula, how much inflation there is, what changes there are in tuition fees paid by the student, how sticky the professors are about salary increases. Two years ago, operating grants were increasing at the rate of 31 per cent annually but last year the government started wielding the economy axe and cut the escalation to 18.5 per cent. It is difficult to see how annual increments of about 20 per cent can be avoided in the next few years—a figure which the Committee itself suggests in its report.

If so, that will mean operating grants alone will be running at $650 millions in 1974-75, an increase of about 150 per cent over the current year and a prospect, in the Committee's solicitous phrase, "not easy to contemplate."

What then is to be done? The Committee suggests several ways to reduce costs, all of which "must be given the most serious consideration." But none of them sounds very attractive and even the Committee didn't think much of them.

It suggests, for example, that there is a need to economize by "rationalizing" the efforts of the universities, terminating programs that have outlived their usefulness and re-allocating resources. But while this can and is being done, it will not produce enormous savings, certainly not of the kind needed.

Similarly, no great hope should be held out for increases in productivity through the introduction of educational technology; such innovations generally mean a net addition in costs. The use of closed-circuit television, for example, is proving in many instances to be an expensive pedagogical hazard.

The Committee also suggests that perhaps admission to university should be restricted (it doesn't say how, although presumably it means by raising academic qualifications) so that the available resources can provide for a smaller enrolment of consumers. This not only runs counter to basic government policy, it seems certain to defeat any government foolish enough to try it.

Alternatively, if enrolments are kept high, some "significant deterioration" in quality might be allowed. This, of course, would not be acceptable to the universities, who would simply turn around and raise fees to get the money they need, thereby defeating the original purpose.

The Committee comes closer to realism when it suggests that perhaps the character of university study could be changed by making a major shift to part time study, and when it suggests shifting a significant portion of the cost burden from the taxpayer to the student through a loan system which would enable the student to borrow against the propect of future earnings.

Status Symbols

Both of these approaches are easier said than done. The professors are not likely to be keen about the first, since it would involve more work, and so far no one has discovered how to finance the second, since the capital amounts needed to launch such a loan program are enormous.

But they deserve exploration if only because they go to the core of the university problem, which is that mass education and university education tend to be contradictions in terms. Forced by political pressures to be all things to all men, the universities are proving to be of less and less use, in a purely educational sense, to anyone. They have become either status symbols or a means to economic goals—goals which could be better and more cheaply satisfied by institutions designed for the purpose, leaving the universities to offer education for its own sake.

In a society which so willingly confuses education with training, this of course is a hard verity to swallow. Perhaps the Commission on Post-Secondary Education, which the government set up last year to try to find out where the province is going and why, will have some more palatable guidelines to offer

Nature Rambles

By FREEMAN KING

During this last week we have had some heavy rain showers. To some they may seem a bother and inconvenience.

But this is a blessing, for it will help to overcome our water shortage in the lakes, streams and ponds.

Water is plainly the most valuable commodity on earth, for without it all life would cease to exist.

It is the most indestructible element there is. Most of it is in the seas and it comes to us on the winds from the Pacific Ocean.

Sometimes it takes the form of hail or snow, carrying with it particles of dust from other parts of the earth, and certain minerals extracted from the sea itself by evaporation.

It soaks into the ground, finding its own "water table," and so spreads into the soil that it may enrich the many species of plants. They, in turn, will provide food and oxygen for all living creatures which otherwise could not exist.

It provides food and a place of refuge for the myriads of creatures that live in water. They in turn provide life for others in this great chain of existence.

It provides the element that enables our sea-living salmon to go up the streams to perpetuate their kind.

It gives power for our generating plants that enable us to live in comfort and security.

One wonders how many of our industries would survive if they were deprived of water brought to us on the winds in the form of rain or snow. Our green, live world would vanish and the earth would become a dead planet.

This wonderful substance returns to the oceans again and again, taking with it minerals leached from the earth. They enable the sea to bring forth many living forms.

We who live in this province are among the most fortunate of all peoples for we have a marvellous supply of "clean water."

Yet mankind continues to abuse and give little heed to this wonderful element. We pollute it in many ways.

Sick From Over-Crowding

'A Huge, Restless Menagerie'

By JEANNE BOCKEL

Psychological disorders may become the greatest killer of man even though medical science is preventing deaths due to physical disease and deterioration.

This prediction, made by Dr. John B. Calhoun of the U.S. National Institute of Mental Health, is based on biological estimates of what overcrowding is doing to human behavior, and comes at the beginning of a new decade when urban problems are of paramount importance.

Dr. Calhoun asserts that the next 15 years will be the most critical of all in terms of human evolution because the normal purpose of reproduction must change. Society must first halt the population growth and then change the purpose of reproduction to be that of maintaining the population in a continuing state of decline, he says.

The scientist bases his assumptions on studies of rat and mouse behavior in overcrowded conditions. He found that adult male rats, when living quarters are scarce, withdraw from competitive and heterosexual activity and become an animal counterpart of the "Bowery bum." They remain generally inactive except for sporadic outbursts of extreme violence.

Violent Reactions

"Female rats become incapable of building nests, care for their litters or even to bear healthy young. In addition, the females become more liable to maim and kill their offspring, while the males react violently against any young males being introduced to their stable population. Furthermore, the animals' abnormal behavior becomes more abnormal as the crowded conditions become worse," he says.

Observations of crowded conditions among humans have led other scientists to come to similar conclusions.

Dr. Desmond Morris, curator of mammals for the Zoological Society of London, regards modern crowded cities as human zoos that encourage a variety of physical and mental abnormalities.

Trapped by Brains

The modern human animal is no longer living under conditions natural to his species, he says. "Trapped by his own brainy brilliance, man has established himself in a huge, restless menagerie where he is in constant danger of cracking."

Wild animals in their natural habitat, Dr. Morris explains, do not mutilate themselves, masturbate, attack their offspring, develop ulcers, become obese, form homosexual bonds, or commit murder. But in zoos, as in urbanized society, he says, these things do occur.

Another psychologist, Dr. Peter Broadhurst of the University of Birmingham in England, agrees that urban areas are less psychologically healthy than rural areas. "The incidence of crime and suicide confirms this," he says.

Genetic Health on Decline?

By ALFRED PULLMAN
The West German Tribune

Contemporary human genetics did not invent the problem of if and how the threatening genetic decay of the human species could be avoided.

People touched upon this question as early as Charles Darwin who did not give a very hopeful reply when he said that natural selection no longer took place in our civilization with the result that it was not the fittest that survived.

But the National Socialists misunderstood Darwin when they decreed that the 1934 Law for the Prevention of Congenitally Diseased Children should be part of national ideology.

This was based on the erroneous belief that the biological world would once again be healthy as long as sickness and suffering could only be suppressed by the introduction of eugenic measures.

Professor Helmut Baitsch, the geneticist from Freiburg, compared this theory with today's findings. We are already able to estimate the number of genes in humans and the frequency of certain mutations that lead to a sudden undesired change in hereditary factors.

But there is one more important aspect. People have realized in the meantime that it is a fatuous way of thinking to announce that some characteristics are advantageous and others injurious. The reverse could be true depending on environmental conditions.

According to what Professor Baitsch told the participants at the Marburg discussion human cultural evolution was possible only because his genetic composition enabled Man to alter his environment continually.

In other words, one of the main reasons that the human species proved to be a master stroke of nature was the fact that its culture was always able to change more quickly than its genetic composition.

These aspects should not be allowed to conceal the fact that undesired mutations caused by radiation and chemical substances are on the increase. And consideration must also be paid to the supposition that humans with inherited complaints will have more children because of improved medical treatment.

In the near future people with slight mental ailments will probably have more children than the national average as they will use no contraceptive methods.

According to cautious estimates made by the Tubingen human geneticist Professor Horst Ritter, among others, every human being has about five defective genes that can cause ailments if they occur in certain combinations.

Professor Baitsch said, "The sober judgment quashes with one blow all hopes of stamping out defective genes. There has never been a person who was genetically perfect, ideal and completely healthy and such a person will never exist."

In the view of Professor Ritter the ambivalence of medical treatment lay in the fact that by helping sick people it could harm tomorrow's population. But it is absolutely impossible to make any exact forecasts here.

The fact that harmful genes are no longer so rigorously eliminated as was the case in natural selection is certainly detrimental to the continued existence of human hereditary factors in future generations.

But is it permissible to ask whether the number of people with hereditary diseases will increase without stopping until our inherited characteristics have degenerated to such a point that they no longer allow human life to continue?

Professors Baitsch and Ritter raised the point that doctors had managed to cure five or six hereditary metabolic diseases by introducing dietary measures from birth. This treatment only stops the manifestation of sickness. Defective genes or genes that are completely lacking remain unaffected.

●

Professor Bickel, the children's doctor from Heidelberg, said that in the last 30 years over one hundred hereditary metabolic diseases had been discovered. Most of them are the feared defective enzyme diseases that cannot be treated for the most part, not even prophylactically.

Experts assure us that future cures will be of great benefit to humanity. But is this balanced by the disadvantages that we will have to put up with when people with hereditary diseases have children?

The Gottingen geneticist Professor Becker was more optimistic in his beliefs. As the age at which people married was becoming younger and younger diseases caused by older parents would decrease.

As Professors Baitsch and Ritter also pointed out, the dismantling of social barriers led to a stronger process of cross-breeding among the population. Professor Becker saw in this trend a favourable influence on hereditary factors. Only the next few decades will show if this optimism is justified.

The Right to Know and . . .

By ART STOTT

Sooner or later almost everyone in our business is confronted by the secret meeting, the camera session preventing his access to the news. Most of us recognize the necessity for such procedure in specific instances. Some issues concerning finance, others involving personnel matters and, on occasion, discussions to determine policy, justify private talks.

Stott

But the closed door is not acceptable on grounds only of personal convenience, the avoidance of some embarrassment, in the discussion of public business by people elected to public office and of direct concern to citizens' lives and pocket books.

The right to know is an essential for an informed public—and our work is concerned with providing the data from which the public may gain the required knowledge.

* * *

There is though, it seems to me, a corollary to the right to know. It's the ability to understand. As I grow older in the trade, the corollary assumes greater importance to me.

The door most firmly closed against me as a young reporter was shut by elected city representatives and emissaries of Eastern Canadian financial interests when Victoria was in the process of refunding its debt during the 'thirties. My indignation was matched by the energy with which I sought to ferret out the happenings behind the closed door. I wasn't a very good ferret.

The negotiations started at City Hall and transferred to the Empress Hotel. I wandered corridors at both places, button-holing civic and financial representatives as they entered and left the camera sessions in an effort to glean information on what was happening. Their replies to my questions never varied. They'd tell me when the arrangements had been completed and they took the position that any earlier announcement would be prejudicial. I persisted in my attempts to find out what was going on, how and why. They persisted, too.

* * *

As happens almost invariably when doors are closed, suspicion was aroused. Outside, a highly vocal ratepayers association, led by Frank Higgins, KC, was thundering eloquently against the "saturnalian debauch of expenditure" which had brought Victoria to the point where it had to refund debt, and darkly asking what was transpiring behind the closed doors.

The impression was conveyed that Machiavellian forces from St. James Street and Bay Street were out to crucify a Victoria inadequately defended by the country boys on the city council and in the city treasurer's department. In point of fact, Mayor David Leeming and his finance committee chairman, Alderman Percy Brown, ably assisted by city comptroller D. A. Macdonald, were doing a pretty good job for the city. But how could you tell when the whole thing was blanketed in camera?

Eventually the city debt was refunded and the explanations were made in open council meeting. To my mortification, I found it difficult to follow the intricacies of the financing involved, and doubly difficult to convey my understanding, such as it was, to our readers.

The right to know had finally been vindicated. The ability to comprehend had not been proved. If Times readers of city hall news had depended on me for a complete and lucid explanation, they had grounds for some misgivings.

A skilled economist, with the ability to meet an old newspaper ideal of writing so a 12-year-old could understand and a scholar would not be insulted, might have presented a clearer picture. But skilled economists frequently seem to differ among themselves in their explanations.

More recently, I've had further personal experience on the corollary to the right to know. A friend of mine created for himself a television aerial from a length of galvanized iron pipe hung on wires from the ceiling of a room. I asked him how I could make a similar aerial. He gave me a book, explaining that the whole procedure was outlined in it.

* * *

So, no doubt, it was. But my right to know was impeded somewhat by my inability to understand the scientific principles involved in the construction. I kept the book a decent length of time and returned it to him with thanks. Then I had cablevision installed.

On another occasion, a graduate student in bio-chemistry. prepared to answer my questions on the work she was doing, lent me her thesis. There, before me, was the complete story of her project—written in English, too, because I could identify most of the verbs, the prepositions, conjunctions, some of the adjectives and adverbs and a number of the nouns. Again I kept the document for a decent length of time and then gave it back, murmuring, "very interesting". She wasn't fooled, either.

I still think that public business should be conducted in public and that the right to know is essential to our society. And since our work is devoted largely to presenting the data from which knowledge can come, it's a natural source of gratification to me to know that all newspaper people are omniscient.

It's Murder, Does Anyone Care?

By CARROLL H. LEE
United Church Observer

"They're coming in here all the time — broken, maimed, dead . . .", the neurosurgeon shook his head sadly, then continued. "It's nothing new — but I know how you feel — I lost my little girl!"

My wife and I stood in grief and horror, hardly able to comprehend the tragedy that had befallen us — our beloved eldest daughter Pat — the one with the blonde hair, eager smile and boundless vitality — on the threshhold of young womanhood, struck down on the sidewalk as she walked with her sister on a sunny, summer day! The driver had swerved off the street to strike her, then sped away without even slowing down.

While we waited for news that could not be good, from the operating room, I talked with the police constable about the young man who had driven the fatal car.

In my desperation I caught only phrases of what he was saying: ". . . young idiot", "full of liquor . . .", ". . . didn't even put on his brakes . . .", "behind bars now!" He had been apprehended after hitting another car and a house.

Yes, not only there in that vacation city, but all across the country they are being brought into hospital emergency rooms — the innocent victims of drinking drivers.

▣

Another child was struck down only two blocks from where we stayed that tragic night.

Some are only bruised and frightened; some are crippled for life; some, like our beloved Pat, pay the final price for a nation's irresponsibility.

There were 28,000 victims of drinking drivers in the United States last year, according to the National Highway Safety Council. There are a proportionate number in Canada.

None of the guilty drivers was charged with murder. Most never saw the inside of a jail. Few even made the front page of the newspaper.

Recently in my own district an intoxicated youth, who pulled out across a double line in the face of an oncoming car and killed two innocent people, had his charge reduced and was given a token three months imprisonment.

Sometimes the driver of the killer vehicle is an alcoholic — one who has a known drinking problem but is still permitted to operate a high-powered vehicle on the highways.

This person is deadly, an accident waiting to happen. But sometimes he is much less obvious, a driver returning from a convention, or a meeting of his service club, or simply a neighborhood get-together.

Perhaps he hasn't drunk that much — just enough so that he cannot find the brake pedal when the little girl follows a bouncing ball onto the street, or when the little boy, intent on a junior hockey game, swerves his bike out into a traffic lane.

Perhaps the driver is a young person with a carload of teenagers who have shared a case of beer at a wiener roast, and has his fledgling judgment impaired just enough to lose control in a crisis. All would likely protest before an accident that they hadn't drunk enough to bother their driving. Few are quoted afterwards.

▣

What are we doing about it—or are we doing anything?

In British Columbia a Royal Commission has been holding hearings so that it can present recommendations to the provincial government concerning changes in liquor legislation.

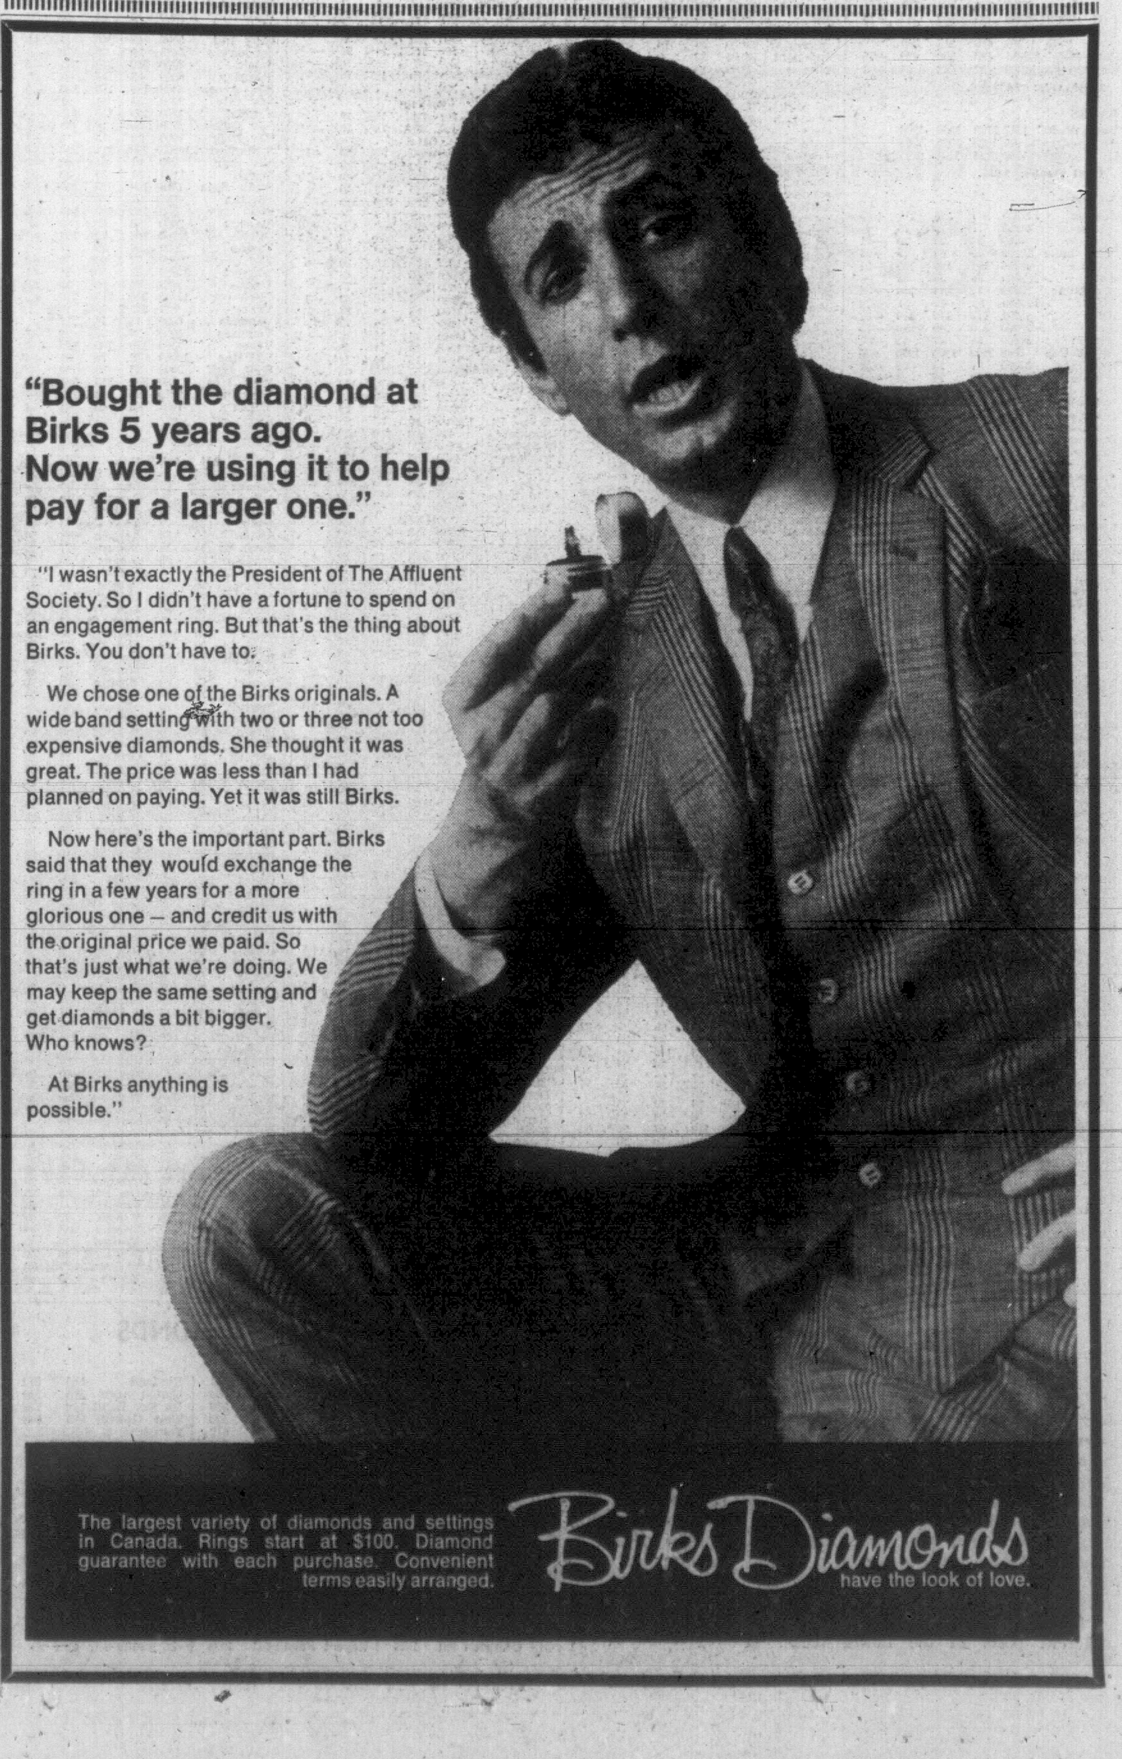
The liquor advocates were out in force. Their briefs for modification or removal of restrictions are strong and well-worded: Lower the drinking age to 18, leave liquor outlets open later at night, on Sundays and election days; establish neighborhood taverns; sell beer and wine in grocery stores.

On the other side? I have yet to read of a single brief presented to this commission by the United Church or any of its courts.

Indeed, opposition to free-flowing liquor has been so negligible that the editor of one daily newspaper remarked that "No group representing a large cross-section of the B.C. public has come out against change or in favor of more restrictions" — and to conclude that he wonders why the commission was necessary at all as the proposed changes seem to be acceptable to the province.

This in a province that last year sold $185 million worth of beer, wine and spirits and reaped a whopping $65 million profit. This in a province that has more than 25,000 known alcoholics.

The prevailing attitude towards liquor law change seems to be "ho-hum, so what else is new?"



"Bought the diamond at Birks 5 years ago. Now we're using it to help pay for a larger one."

"I wasn't exactly the President of The Affluent Society. So I didn't have a fortune to spend on an engagement ring. But that's the thing about Birks. You don't have to.

We chose one of the Birks originals. A wide band setting with two or three not too expensive diamonds. She thought it was great. The price was less than I had planned on paying. Yet it was still Birks.

Now here's the important part. Birks said that they would exchange the ring in a few years for a more glorious one — and credit us with the original price we paid. So that's just what we're doing. We may keep the same setting and get diamonds a bit bigger. Who knows?

At Birks anything is possible."

The largest variety of diamonds and settings in Canada. Rings start at $100. Diamond guarantee with each purchase. Convenient terms easily arranged.

Port Management Integration Due

VANCOUVER (CP) — Transport Minister Don Jamieson says a plan to re-organize port management on the Lower Mainland will be unveiled soon.

Speaking at the Vancouver Board of Trade annual meeting Mr. Jamieson said "there is a need to take the whole complex into a well-organized, rational plan."

"It is not rational to have different ports in the Lower Mainland competing against each other," he said.

"Integration is part of the solution and we must think in terms of rationalizing all aspects of port business. We want the ports to complement, rather than to fight each other.

"We are working to get a new approach to harbor development in Canada and hope to make an announcement within several weeks."

Stampede on Oils Big Feature

By NICK FERRIS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

An oil strike in the Northwest Territories by Imperial Oil ignited a stampede of buying on Canadian stock markets this week.

Imperials' announcement Thursday that oil had flowed to the surface of its Atkinson Point well 50 miles northeast of Tuktoyaktuk in the Mackenzie River delta sent prices of stocks with interests in or near that area soaring.

Markets started the week on a bad foot, dropping sharply Monday and turning mixed Tuesday before advancing slightly Wednesday. Trading was light in the three days.

But after Imperial's announcement early Thursday of the first confirmed discovery in the Canadian Arctic investors grabbed at oil stocks with any connection with the North and with oils.

Trading was frantic Thursday although Imperial said in its announcement that further drilling would be necessary to evaluate the find.

But speculation continued Friday and oil stocks rose for most of the session.

Although some profit-taking in late trading Friday cut gains of that session by more than half, oils still closed with moderate gains.

The most active stocks were those of companies with interests in or around the Mackenzie delta, and pipeline and oil refining stocks.

The activity in integrated oils pushed industrial groups of Canadian markets higher Thursday and Friday.

Imperial's find seems to ensure Canadian markets of another long oil play.

Because of the further drilling needed to determine the size and value of the find, and because of the wisespread interests in the North of other oil companies, speculation should remain high until more definite news is available.

Erosion Continues On New York Market

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market began this week on a losing foot and kept right on stepping toward lower ground.

"The market wandered aimlessly most of the week," said one analyst, "with a gradual erosion bringing prices down rather than a wave of selling pressure."

Investors have been hesitant to make buying or selling commitments because of a lack of news developments, brokers noted.

"It's a state of suspended animation, where the cross-currents don't blend into a clear trend," said Monte Gordon of Bache and Co.

The week's five consecutive losing sessions brought the Dow Jones industrial average to a loss of 15.51 to end at 782.60.

The largest drop was Monday —7.59 points—when investors were apparently influenced by the New York Federal Reserve Bank's call for continued monetary restraint, even if it leads to a recession.

On Friday the market tried to reverse the trend and began the day with a moderate, broad-based gain, but a late and sudden drop in the price of IBM led to a decline among many glamor stocks.

IBM had been trading at record highs under the buying influence of institutional investors, but a report of lower fourth-quarter earnings spurred selling and it plunged almost 12 points on the day to 369¾.

Professional Opportunity In Association Services

POSITION: BCSTA requires a mature and energetic person of executive or potential executive ability to serve as part of a provincial staff based in Vancouver. Successful candidate will work with major committees and divisional directors. Range of activities will include field liaison with school boards; contact with inter-related organizations, legislators and the public at large.

QUALIFICATIONS: University degree is not essential but majors in Economics, Business Administration, or Sociology would be an asset. Non-degree applicants with substantial business or association background would be considered equally eligible. An ability to communicate effectively both verbally and in writing, and to relate to government agencies and the public, in large and small groups, is required.

SALARY: According to qualifications and experience. Closing date for applications is January 31, 1970. Duties will commence as soon as possible thereafter.
Apply in writing to:

The General Secretary,
British Columbia School Trustees Association,
Vancouver 1, B.C.

BUSINESS and FINANCE

Editor: G. S. Kent

Ibes

Vancouver-based Australian manufacturer of electronics-data systems, Ibes International Ltd. has appointed American industrialist Robert W. Halliday to its board of directors.

Halliday, former executive vice-president of Boise Cascade Corp., last year was named chairman of the board of U.S. Natural Resources Inc. He also is chairman of the Kensington Organization Inc., and a director of Heath Tecna Inc., Maple Leaf Mills Ltd., Allied Equities Corp., D. E. I. Industries Inc., Aero-Go Inc., Bank of Idaho, Neonex International Ltd. and Shareholders Capital Corp.

Manufacturers

A record $1.15 billion in new sales of insurance was reported in 1969 by Manufacturers Life Insurance Co., said president A. T. Seedhouse.

Business in force, he said at the annual meeting, reached $8.47 Billion, divided between Americans ($3.9 billion), Canadians ($2.8 billion) and Britons, West Indians, South Africans, Israelites and other overseas nationals ($1.8 billion).

Leitch

Leitch Gold Mines Ltd. plans to buy the assets of Mastodon-Highland Bell Mines Ltd., which owns a producing silver mine in B.C. for 750,000 Leitch shares.

Mastodon-Highland Bell is owned 99 per cent by Highland-Bell Mines Ltd. of Vancouver, which already owns 540,000 shards of Leitch.

Leitch shareholders are to meet Feb. 9 to vote on a proposal to increase the company's authorized capital to 10 million common shares from the present three million shares, and to create 2 million preferred shares, in connection with the transaction,

Arctic

Nickel property of Arctic Gold and Silver Mines Ltd., Carcross, Y.T., has been outlined by Newmont Mining Corp. to indicate a major ore body.

The company said nickel-copper-cobalt mineralization has been located in an area about 400 by 4,800 feet, and it plans an immediate drilling program to define the zone more accurately.

A large stockpile of ore is on hand at Arctic's mill, to be refined for Interprovincial Silver Mines when winter conditions abate to allow the mill to reopen.

Utica

Results from diamond driling started last month to explore extensions of its B ore zone will be reported by late January, said Utica Mines Ltd., of its Keremeos silver property.

A contractor is averaging 25 feet per day in driving a new drift at the 2,210 foot level, where diamond drilling is being done. Previous drilling indicated 31,000 tons with good silver values.

Giant Mascot

Giant Mascot Mines Ltd. reports major underground exploration work and negotiation of a new sales contract for its nickel concentrates as immediate projects for 1970.

A new agreement is expected to be concluded by the end of February, said Jack Austin, president. Since 1960, Giant Mascot has been selling concentrates from its Hope mine to Sumitomo Metal Mining Ltd., in Japan.

Underground exploration is also an objective for its copper property, 27 miles from Hope on the Princeton highway.

Net income for 1969 (Sept. 30) was $561,988 compared with $546,750 in the previous 12-month period.

YOUR TAXES . . .

. . : By I. H. ASPER

Retroactive Feature Will Produce Shock

(Mr. Asper is a Winnipeg lawyer and authority on taxation matters.)

"Some of the proposals simply won't work." With this simple confession, Finance Minister Benson told a Toronto audience that several planks in the launching pad of his tax reform program had been shown to have been made of papier-mache.

In mentioning only a few of the unworkable proposals, Benson merely scratched the surface. By the time the public has had an opportunity to complete its own analysis, many more blemishes will be discovered.

For example, there will likely be a memorable explosion when the owners of closely held corporations discover that, at least at the present moment, the department of finance has every intention of levying the capital gains tax retroactively in respect of most of the capital gains they make on their shares.

CLEVERLY DRAFTED

This, despite the repeated assurances that there will be no retroactivity to the gains tax. There's not a word about it in the White Paper, which most observers now agree has been cleverly drafted to draw the analyst's attention away from the delayed-action bombs. But, it's there anyway, and finance officials have privately admitted that this is what's intended.

It's complicated, but here's how it will work.

First, one must recall that the plan provides that when a private company earns a profit under the new system, it will pay the usual corporate tax at 50 per cent on that profit. Then, when the after-tax profit is paid out to the shareholders in dividends, the shareholder takes into income the full amount of the corporation's pre-tax profit, calculates his tax, and then receives a full credit against his personal tax for the amount of tax the company has paid.

Example: The company earns $200, and pays $100 in tax, leaving after-tax profit of $100. Then the company pays a dividend of the remaining $100 to the shareholder. The shareholder takes $200 (the entire company profit) into his income, and assuming he's in the 50 per cent bracket, his tax would be $100. However, he then deducts from his tax the $100 the corporation paid initially on those earnings. The result is that he has no tax to pay.

In fact, if his personal bracket is below 50 per cent, he'll get a tax refund. So far, so good.

VALUATION DAY

Now, let's go to valuation day. Suppose the book value of his shares in the company is $1,000, but because of the company's earning power (goodwill) the market value of the shares is $3,000. Here's where the scalpel is deftly inserted.

The finance officials intend that the final legislation will provide that where the V-day value of the shares exceeds their asset value because of goodwill, even though that goodwill was built up as a tax-free capital asset before valuation day, the difference in value, that is, the capital gain, will be taxed even before it is actually realized.

Apparently the law will provide that the next after-tax earnings of the company up to an amount equal to the pre-existing goodwill value reflected in the share value will not qualify for tax credit when paid out as dividends to the shareholder.

In our example, where the shares have a book value of $1,000 and a market value of $3,000 at V-day, here's what would happen. On the next $4,000 of company earnings, the tax will be $2,000.

When the after-tax profit is paid as a dividend to the shareholder, he would, unlike in every other situation, get no credit for the $2,000 of tax paid by the company. Thus he'd pay another $1,000 of tax on the $2,000 dividend—making a total tax of 75 per cent on those earnings.

This has the exact effect of taxing the capital gain that would occur if on the day after the new system began, the shareholder sold his shares for $3,000, realizing what should be a $2,000 tax-free capital gain. It's complicated, all right, but there can be no mistaking the fact that the net effect is to tax capital gains that have accrued before the new system was suggested.

This may well be the reason Benson and his officials have been assuring small company owners that there's no problem in evaluating their company shares at V-day. Set your own value, if you're prepared to pay the tax price.

INEQUITABLE

If you set it low, you'll pay a high capital gains tax, at full rates, when you sell. If you set it high, you're caught by the previously described ingenious bit of retroactivity, as well as being committed to the high value for estate tax purposes when you die.

Retroactivity in legislation is always grossly inequitable. It's identical to the government passing a law today saying that as of yesterday, what you did, although legal at the time, is now illegal effective the moment before you did it. Now you must pay the penalty.

No government can be proud of suggesting law which so clearly violates and distorts the most elementary principles of justice. If government officials have spoken out of turn in allowing the foregoing interpretation to become widely circulated in legal and accounting circles, then the greatest contribution Benson can make to the tax debate is to immediately repudiate it, in clear and unambiguous terms.

Then, and only then, can the tens of thousands of shareholders of private companies rest from the fear that they are about to be subjected to a monumental injustice in satisfying some anonymous theoretician's personal and somewhat strange view of what constitutes "equity."

Imports Show Gain

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian imports rose more than 14 per cent in December to reach $1,244,500,000 and bring the total for 1969 to $14,197,400,000, up nearly 15 per cent from 1968, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has reported.

December imports from Commonwealth and such tariff-preference countries, apart from the United Kingdom, jumped more than 50 per cent Imports from the U.K. were down 16 per cent at $59,300,000.

Imports for the month from the United States were 14 per cent higher at $885,200,000, and from all other countries they were up 18.2 per cent at $240,000,000.

For the 12 months, Canadian imports from the United Kingdom were up 13.6 per cent at $790,500,000. From other Commonwealth countries, they were up 26.3 per cent at $570,000,000.

Imports from the United States were 14 per cent higher at $10,310,800,000, the first year such imports exceeded $10,000,000,000.

Imports from all other countries in 1969 were 16.8 per cent higher at $2,524,200,000.

December exports, with cumulative export figures for the year, are expected to be reported by DBS in a few days.

Awarded Damages

VANCOUVER (CP) — Judgment for $181,332 has been awarded in B.C. Supreme Court in a construction company's breach-of-contract suit against a sub-contractor and an insurance company.

Imperial Construction Ltd. was given judgment for $92,332 against Lucarno Construction Ltd. and for $89,000 against Dominion Insurance Corp., Lucarno's bonding company.

Measures Need Time: Lambert

TORONTO (CP) — Imposition of mandatory price, wage and credit controls would "accomplish little except to put the economy in a straitjacket," said Allen Lambert, president of the Toronto Dominion Bank.

He told the annual meeting this week:

"Comprehensive wage and price controls have no proven value in reducing or eliminating inflation and would be impossible to impose effectively in present circumstances."

He said such controls would create "greater distortions and hardships than our present rate of inflation."

Lambert said Canada has not given present monetary and fiscal measures enough time to prove their effectiveness in stemming inflation.

Consumer spending "moderated substantially" in the last half of 1969, and this trend is expected to continue well into 1970. This moderation represented "one of the first clear indications of a break in inflationary expectations."

The white paper on tax reform was really a proposal to collect "hundreds of millions of additional dollars" from Canadians, although the public had not generally been made aware of this, he said.

Piper Aircraft Founder Dies

LOCK HAVEN, Pa. (UPI) — William T. Piper Sr., 89, founder of Piper Aircraft Corp., which became one of the world's giants in the light plane field, died Thursday night in hospital.

Piper's development and production in 1937 of the Piper Cub, a highly-successful two-passenger, single engine plane, made him known as the "Henry Ford of aviation."

Political Abandonment West's Feeling

Because of his emphasis on the "one Canada" theme, many westerners thought he intended to be tough with Quebec's demands, that his fixation with turning the federal government into a French-oriented technocracy was not really very high in his list of personal priorities.

Now, westerners are having difficulty reconciling this impression with the prime minister's actions, and having no familiar framework within which to fit the inexorable impulses of French Canada toward social change, they interpret each Quebec gain as the hot breath of revolution.

This is the great unstated issue across Western Canada: the feeling of political abandonment by Ottawa for the sake of assuaging the demands of a militant Quebec.

The resultant frustration is made worse by the fact that the West no longer has its own parties of political protest through which it can funnel its demands.

All the West's own political movements (such as the federal wing of the Social Credit, the Progressive Party, the United Farmers of Alberta) have either vanished or (like the CCF) have been taken over by the labor movement and eastern intellectuals.

Caretaker Function

No federal politician now in the House of Commons can claim the personal resonance with the West that would give him the right to be a legitimate spokesman for the western point of view. The Liberals' three Prairie ministers—Bud Olson, Jim Richardson and Otto Lang—are at best performing a caretaker function for a leader who has yet to emerge.

This was the great strength of John Diefenbaker. "It is an emotional experience for a westerner," says Jack Johnson, a Calgary lawyer who is himself a Liberal, "to see a television program showing Mr. Diefenbaker looking at the flat prairie and reminiscing about the past. This feeling was never based on the crass assumption that he would pour money into the West, but merely on the intangible knowledge that he understood the West and had a real empathy with it."

Representation

The absence of a visible champion has been aggravated by the declining parliamentary representation of the three prairie provinces. Population shifts have reduced the number of western seats in the Commons from 55 in 1945 to 45 in the last election. The other great change, of course, has been the declining importance of wheat in the national economy.

Forty years ago, wheat sales accounted for fully one-tenth of our gross national product and a third of Canada's exports. (Now, they barely make up 1 per cent of the GNP and less than 4 per cent of overseas sales.) Nearly everything the West produces—wheat, oil, potash and natural gas—is a surplus commodity.

TRUDEAU
. . . little for West

The wheat problem is made incredibly complex by the fact that western agriculture has become an industry in which a farmer may have land and machinery worth $100,000 on paper, yet live close to the poverty line in terms of cash income.

The most absurd and damaging thing Trudeau could have said to the Prairies was "Why should I sell your wheat?"—whether his remark was quoted out of context or not.

The Prairies have lived for half a century in a classical contradiction. Westerners take pride in individualism, free enterprise, the justice of the free market and the iniquity of tariffs. Yet no other region in the country is as deeply committed to governmental responsibility and administration as are the wheat farmers.

Mid-westerners are caught in this basic paradox while hardly being aware of it. Any leader who can cater to both points of view (or ideologies) at the same time could politically dominate the prairies.

Same Aspirations

What few Ottawa politicians appreciate is that even those mid-westerners who have remained farmers are turning away from the frontier outlook.

The impact of television and travel has given them the same aspirations as the big-city dwellers of the East.

I remember sitting in a Regina movie house a couple of years ago and hearing two middle-aged women talking about their dishwashers (which they both had), garbage disposal units (which they both wanted), hairpieces, a story by James Baldwin in the then current issue of McCall's. Except for one brief reference to cattle stock, it was a conversation so empty of regional overtones that it could have been overheard in Toronto or Chicago.

Nature Changing

Apart from its political and sociological manifestations, what is really happening to the West is that the nature of Canada is changing. This was a country built and developed on an east-west axis, which proved the justification for the colonization of the West. But now, air traffic, rail freight, long-distance calls, magazines, hydro-electric hoop-up, sports, trade, defence production, taste—almost everything is moving in a north-south direction.

As westerners feel this vertical pull, they are not unnaturally attracted to the idea of leaving confederation and finding a new home in the American middle-west, where they perceive close ideological compatibilities and a solution to economic hardships.

Prairie leaders are more conscious than ever before of the benefits of a customs union with the United States.

Partly, this is based on the amazing diversification of the prairie economy which has made them feel that a commercial relationship with the American middle-west might be more logical than continued dependency on the distant markets of Central Canada.

Bargain Not Kept

None of this means that the prairies are about to separate. "Separatism in Saskatchewan," is something people here feel rather than think about. But there's no doubt that most westerners are concerned that the essential bargin of confederation has not been kept by Ottawa."

Murray Donnelly, a political scientist at the University of Manitoba, is convinced that one good wheat sale would silence all talk of separatism.

"But," he adds, "there is a very real feeling in the West that it is being under-represented or misrepresented in Ottawa."

The underlying significance of western separatism, it seems to me, is the opposite of what appears on the surface.

Its real meaning is a plea for some effective power at the center.

Various phrases are used: "The West is not being heard," it needs a "voice" in Ottawa, it is not "understood,"

This is a sentimental expression of the problem as articulated by Quebec some years ago. "What does the West want?" will be the next question from the Ottawa establishment.

The substance of the issue has little to do with "listening" or understanding." In essence, the west wants power of some kind at the centre — a more effective version of Canadian federalism. Prairie separatism is more a disappointed reaction than a basic urge.

The political problem is how to create channels for the expression of western power. The federal-parliamentary system is probably inadequate to the task and extra-parliamentary channels will have to be established.

Concrete solutions are hard to imagine, but new institutions directly linking Ottawa and western cities for urban development may help.

Greater local decision-making on wheat marketing and administration and on transportation would also be useful. Official western representatives on the board of the bank of Canada is a necessary first step.

Whatever happens, Ottawa's politicians must soon move beyond their vague gestures toward solving Prairie problems. But first they will have to recognize the fact that Canada really does extend west of Windsor.

Brothers Want Bogus Coins

Finance Minister Benson is the great collector of Canadian gold.

Two Saanich brothers are going to find out if he ever parts with any.

Craig Hodson, 22, and his brother Kim, 13, of 877 Royal Oak found 15 gold coins when they were out hiking last November. They turned them over to Saanich police but no one ever showed up to claim them.

Investigating officers suspected the old coins might be forgeries and shipped them off to an RCMP laboratory in Ottawa for testing.

The word is back from Ottawa, Insp. John Post said today. The coins are counterfeit antiques — but there's nothing phoney about the gold in them.

If the coins were authentic they would be American $20 gold pieces, known as double eagle liberty head, minted between 1855 and 1866 and with a collector's value between $5,000 and $6,000.

The value of the gold in the counterfeits is not known and where they came from remains a mystery.

The Criminal Code section dealing with such items says they will be disposed of or dealt with as the minister of finance directs.

Mrs. Hodson said Friday a letter will be written to Benson enquiring about disposition of the gold in the coins.

The Hodson boys may end up with nothing but a tribute from Saanich police.

"They deserve a lot of credit," said Insp. Post. "They found a treasure and yet they turned it in. We want to express our appreciation for that."

Dutch Organist At Cathedral

An eminent Dutch organist, Feike Asma, will be heard in recital Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Christ Church Cathedral.

Organist of the Reformed Church at Maassluis, Holland, Asma recorded the Viernes Symphonies on the organ of Notre Dame de Paris for the Dutch Radio Society. He has also recorded these and many other works for RCA.

In 1964 he was awarded the medal of the Society of Lettres, Arts and Sciences of France for his promotion of the French organ culture.

His Victoria recital which is sponsored by the Victoria Chapter of the Royal Canadian College of Organists, includes works by Bach, Franck, Andriessen, Langlais and others.

BENEVOLENT SCIENCE URGED

OTTAWA (CP) — Dr. O. M. Solandt, chairman of the Science Council of Canada, urged Friday that a new organization of all scientific and technical disciplines pioneer in ensuring that new knowledge is used for the welfare of mankind.

He told the national conference of scientists and engineers, which aims to establish such an organization, that the need no longer exists for an association simply to advance science.

"The need is rather to understand, guide, and use science effectively for the welfare of mankind."

Province, HBC Linked in History

British Columbia owes its existence to the Hudson's Bay Co., Lieutenant-Governor J. R. Nicholson told a history-conscious audience Thursday.

Speaking at the opening of The Bay's 300th anniversary historical exhibition, he said the early activities of the company in the 19th century saved the province from being absorbed by the Unites States.

He described the anniversary as "300 years of romance, adventure and challenge."

Northern Canada, the western provinces, and British Columbia were first developed by the Hudson's Bay and much of Canada as it is today was due to the activities of the company, he said.

The lieutenant-governor became the first recipient of a special four-inch bronze medal struck to mark the company's tercentenary.

It was presented by Ron Powlan, chairman of the Victoria store's anniversary celebrations committee.

The exhibition will be open for a month. There will also be special conducted tours for school children.

B.C. Auto Plan Claimed Best

NANAIMO — Attorney-General Leslie Peterson praised the new B.C. insurance program here Friday saying its main advantage would be quick compensation for complainants.

Complainants would still maintain the right to sue, the Attorney-General added. During the legislative session, which opens Thursday, the final rates and compensation values would be reviewed by committee and changes suggested.

Peterson said the program would be equal to or better than any other in Canada or the United States.

He pointed out that a leading insurance expert, Dr. Alan Lindon of York University wrote an article for the Toronto Telegram recently in which he praised the system as "perhaps the best system in the common law world."

The attorney-general predicted a bright future for Canada, though he tempered this with a provision that the federal white paper on taxation was not implemented. If it was, he added, "expectations would be drastically changed.

He also warned that people must "get rid of this inflation psychology." The "let's live it up Saturday night, and get up Sunday morning poor" attitude is a dangerous philosophy that's permeating too much of society today, he said.

Even though Canada faces serious economic problems, Peterson said, "I think if we can exercise some self-discipline and a little restraint, we can look forward to a great period of economic and industrial expansion in the country."

The best way to deflate inflation, he suggested, was for citizens to live within their means.

"The best way that governments as a whole can fight inflation is by not spending any more than is taken in on the revenue side to balance the budget — and this our finance minister has been doing for the last 18 years."

The rosy future the Attorney-General expected was due to the figures which showed that B.C. has the "most highly-qualified and most highly-skilled work-force in Canada today." He said there would be a 50 per cent increase in population, double the retail sales, and 1,250,000 more in the labour force within the next decade in the province.

Ship's Oil Leak Brings $8,500 Penalty Levy

NANAIMO — A defective alarm system in an oil pump cost the captain of a Greek freighter $8,500 Friday.

The system, out of commission for 16 months, resulted in oil spreading over a half-mile area in Tahsis harbor on Tuesday.

The oil forced a pile-driving company to cease operations and stuck to pleasure boats.

GUILTY PLEA

Captain Nickolaos Vakantasis of the Ss Argonaftis pleaded guilty to the spillage in Nanaimo Provincial Court.

He was fined $3,500 and ordered to pay damages estimated at $5,000.

The spillage resulted when the ship's engineers were transferring oil and did not shut off the pump. The oil then flowed from an overflow pipe.

Damages will be paid to the pile-driving company and to the owners of the pleasure boats.

HUNTER TRAINING AT ROYAL OAK JR.

Hunter Training Course co-sponsored by the Saanich Peninsula school board and the department of recreation and conservation starts Tuesday at Royal Oak junior secondary.

The course will include wildlife indentification, safe gun handling, game laws, water safety, and bush survival.

Anyone over 15 may enroll at a cost of $3 for the 10-session course. Registrations will be accepted from 7 p.m. Tuesday in room 11 of the school, and the first class is scheduled to get under way at 7:30 p.m.

Instructors are all members of the North Saanich Rod and Gun Club. The course ran last fall in Sidney, as well as some Interior points.

MANDATORY SOON

The hunter training course will become mandatory next fall for all hunters applying for the first time for a hunting licence, and for Fish and Game Act violators wishing to renew their license.

More than 50 courses sponsored by the Saanich board's evening division are due to run from mid-January to April.

New courses include "The Law and You", mental health, crocheting and knitting, French hand smocking, pattern drafting, basic Japanese, and an oil-paint workshop.

Repeat courses are flower arraning, easy sewing, interior decorating, batik, woodcarving and sculpture, contract bridge, Chinese cooking, speed reading and group guitar lessons.

For the activity-minded there is: keep-fit classes for women, better boating, practical sailing, outboard motor care and golf lessons at Golfland.

Courses for Indians of the four district band include: cooking, sewing, home improvement and Indian language.

PICKING OUT the bad stuff from the fish catch made about one mile from shore near Crofton is fisherman Earl Hegglund of Chemainus. Fishermen contend wood chips that fall from barges being towed through Sansum Narrows to Crofton Pulp and Paper Limited where they are unloaded are suffocating fish because, as they rot, they destroy oxygen in the water. They also say that undigested pieces of wood pulp frequently coat their nets. This netful was dragged from 90 fathoms. (Ed Gould photo)

Phone Change For Fulford

FULFORD HARBOR—A new portable telephone exchange will be established at Fulford by the B.C. Telephone Co. at an estimated cost of $143,000.

It calls for the transfer of 270 customers from the Ganges exchange to the Fulford Harbor exchange and new telephone numbers.

It will go into effect on June 7.

R. C. Simpson, customer service manager, said the new exchange will improve service for customers in the Fulford Harbor area, making two-party and individual lines available.

Strathcona Park Logging Plan May Be Challenged in Court

By MORGAN MacGREGOR

CAMPELL RIVER — The provincial government's right to allow logging in Strathcona Park will be challenged by the Comox-Campbell River labor council if enough evidence can be assembled.

Vancouver lawyer Tom Berger met Saturday in a closed meeting with biologists, conservationists and interested citizens to discuss evidence and determine the direction in which the case would proceed.

Berger, defeated NDP leader in the August provincial election, has been retained by the labor council, to prepare the case.

NAILED DOWN

"We need nailed down evidence," said Berger, "in order to persuade the courts to intervene."

Logging in the park created a province-wide controversy last September.

Recreation Minister Ken Kiernan announced the government was swapping 576 acres of parkland at Cape Scott in exchange for cutting rights to 147 million board feet of timber in Strathcona.

Raven Lumber Company of Campbell River held rights of first refusal on timber in part of the Cape Scott land and have since obtained rights to the remaining parcels.

The rights were given to the provincial government in exchange for Strathcona timber.

The two parcels in the park include 10-year cutting rights to 5,260 acres.

"Court action, if taken, will be based on evidence of the changes in the ecology of the park and the destruction of the park for recreational purposes," said Berger.

He asked that the nature of the evidence discussed at the meeting remain undisclosed until he's had an opportunity to study the material and prepare a civil case.

It was also requested that the names of those attending the meeting be withheld until a later date.

Labor council secretary-treasurer Larry Widen said he is hopeful that other interested citizens will come forward with material that might be of help to Berger in preparing the case.

In Days of the Silent Movie, a Leer Said a Lot

By GARY ARNOLD

WASHINGTON — The American Film Institute Theatre opens its first home stand tonight at the National Gallery of Art with a star-studded lineup from Hollywood's early dynastic period.

The names on the marquee will be such as Griffith (David Wark and Raymond),

MURRAY

Von Stroheim, Murnau, Sjostrom, Keaton, la Cava, Brown (Clarence and Karl), Gilbert, Gish, Marsh, Murray, Lillie, Chaney, Bow, O'Brien, Dressler, Shearer, Gaynor, Fields and Compson.

The series includes 12 silent features made between 1916 and 1928.

The opening series is called "Here Comes the Parade," suggested by Kevin Brownlow's recent book, "The Parade's Gone By." Both the book and this series are nostalgic surveys of Hollywood movies in their silent golden age.

Tonight's film, Erich von Stroheim's "The Merry Widow," is one in the eye for anyone who believes the period was naive or innocent.

Compared to "The Merry Widow," recent films like "I Am Curious (Yellow)" and "Coming Apart" are so much child's play. They may have racy interludes, but their prevailing point of view is sentimental and liberal humanitarian.

With von Stroheim it's the other way around: he can't get away with nudity or simulated intercourse, but his point of view is racy, misanthropic, corrupt. The milieu itself is decadent and artificial—middle European royalty and aristocracy and cafe society—but the director is even more knowing than his subjects.

* * *

"The Merry Widow" was made for MGM in 1925, immediately after von Stroheim's long, unsuccessful battle with the studio over "Greed."

Unlike "Greed." this film was a big commercial hit, and it's reputed to be the least tampered-with of all von Stroheim's movies. One assumes that the wedding night scene between showgirl Sally O'Hara (Mae Murray) and the crippled, lecherous old baron (Tully Marshall) was foreshortened.

Von Stroheim has such a grand time establishing the baron's foot fetish that you just know he could devote several hours to the wedding night if given the green light. Fortunately, the old boy keels over with a fast stroke.

Despite all the back lighting von Stroheim gives her, Miss Murray remains one of the most corporeal little dames in movie history; it's hard to believe any of the baron's suggestions would have surprised her.

Von Stroheim himself intended to play the villainous Prince Mirko, but Roy D'Arcy's leering performance seems sufficient. John Gilbert is charming as his cousin, the libertine but noble Prince Danilo.

The second program is a double-bill of Karl Brown's "Stark Love" and Sam Taylor's "Exit Smiling" Starring Beatrice Lillie.

The former is a semi-documentary melodrama shot in North Carolina in 1927.

KEATON

Brown was one of the most famous cameramen of the silent period. He began his career as the assistant to G. W. ("Billy") Bitzer on "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" and went on to photograph "The Covered Wagon" and "Beggar on Horseback" and several other films directed by James Cruze.

"Stark Love" uses non-professional backwoods people in a story loosely woven from their own way of life, much as Flaherty did with the Eskimos in "Nanook of the North."

"Exit Smiling," an MGM comedy made in 1926, was Miss Lillie's only starring vehicle in the silent period. The titles (by Joe Farnhan) introduce her as "Violet, the drudge of the troupe . . . who also played parts like 'Nothing' in 'Much Ado About Nothing'."

* * *

Victor Sjostrom's "He Who Gets Slapped," and Clarence Badger's "Paths to Paradise" are paired on Jan. 19. One of the great Swedish directors, Sjostrom came to the United States in 1924 at the start of a foreign wave that included Stiller, Lubitsch, Murnau and many others.

"He," based on Leonid Andreyev's expressionistic play, was Sjostrom's second picture for MGM. It stars Lon Chaney in that archetypal role of the man (in this case a scientist) who flees from a humiliating experience, becomes a circus clown and uses his humiliation as the source of his humor.

Norma Shearer and John Gilbert (sans moustache) are the romantic leads, and Tully Marshall returns as another sort of villain. Sjostrom, who died a few years ago, was the marvelous old doctor in Bergman's "Wild Strawberries."

"Paths to Paradise," 1927, matches Raymond Griffith and Betty Compson as sophisticated con artists. Although not as famous as Chaplin and Keaton and Lloyd and Langdon, Griffith was considered the most urbane and civilized of the silent screen comedians.

"Paths to Paradise" ends with a frantic car chase as Griffith and Miss Compson attempt to beat the police to the Mexican border.

Like Gilbert, Griffith was a casualty of the talkies. His voice, damaged by bronchial pneumonia, recorded as a husky whisper. (Gilbert's recorded an octave or two higher than it was, but by the time better equipment was introduced, his career had been ruined.)

Although few young people have seen Griffith's comedies, they have seen him as the dying French soldier in the foxhole with Lew Ayres in "All Quiet on the Western Front."

F. W. Murnau's "Sunrise" will be shown Jan. 20. William Fox imported Murnau to Hollywood in 1927, hailing him as "the world's greatest director."

Murnau's intense, atmospheric style represents one of the last great refinements of silent movie narration. The closest modern equivalents are a few of Bergman's films, especially his early "Three Strange Loves."

Carl Mayer's scenario is based on a story by Herman Sudermann. George O'Brien (looking oddly similar to Dustin Hoffman in "The Graduate") plays the young farm husband who is almost tempted to kill his wife (Janet Gaynor) and run off with "a woman of the city" (Margaret Livingstone).

* * *

Miss Gaynor won the first academy award for this picture (as well as two others, "Seventh Heaven" and "Street Angel").

On Jan. 21, "The Cameraman" and "Mantrap" will be shown. The former is generally considered Buster Keaton's last good film.

In "The Cameraman," he plays a young man who wants to get a job with the Hearst newsreel service. His ardor leads him into several wild adventures, including a tong war.

The movie was supposed to be made on location in New York, but Keaton was mobbed by crowds and the company eventually fled west to get some work done. The newsreel footage includes Gertrude Ederle, Jimmy Walker and Charles Lindbergh.

At his best, Keaton was probably the most brilliant comic mind in the period and his films the most perfect comic creations.

"Mantrap," based on a Sinclair Lewis novel and directed by Victor Fleming in 1926, stars lively, impudent Clara Bow as a manicurist who weds a country storekeeper (Ernest Torrence) and then sets her cap for a vacationing divorce lawyer (Percy Marmont).

The film was made a year before Miss Bow was discovered by Elinor Glyn and officially christened "The It Girl."

Sjostrom's "The Scarlet Letter," produced for MGM in 1926, stars Lillian Gish in her superb performance as Hester Prynne, with Lars Hanson as Dimmesdale and Henry B. Walthall as Chillingworth. Despite the simplifications of Hawthorne's material, this is one of the most compelling films ever made from a literary classic in the U.S.

FIELDS

MELANIE BIVAR
. . . Snow White

Top Pantomime

For 15 years the White Rock Players have been staging a proper British-type Christmas Pantomime, Complete with Principal Boy, Dame (played by a male actor), topical jokes, Good Fairy and all.

Their successes have been consistent but this year, with Snow White, they really tore the lid off.

Eighteen sold-out performances in White Rock were followed by two more in Vancouver's Queen Elizabeth Theatre.

Word of mouth and critical bouquets had done a good job for the company which is amateur with just a sprinkling of equity players appearing by courtesy.

James Barber in the Province glowed with praise, calling Snow White "the best they have done in years" and "very close to the classic English pantomine."

On Jan. 26, the company comes to the McPherson Playhouse for two performances, one at 6 and one at 8:30 p.m.

Ed Carlin, who directs the show, had done the script which is based on the traditional story, filling it with original and funny ideas, jokes and gags and a big helping of political satire.

There are 65 people in the cast, their ages ranging from seven to 68, and, says one newspaper account, "not one of them falls flat."

Musical director and composer of the score which has been hailed as tuneful and gay, is June Daye, an experienced professional musician.

It's genuine family entertainment with a touch of spice which even had one mainland sports columnist (having been strong-armed into attending by wife and family) devoting precious inches to a flight of enthusiasm.

Tickets for the pantomine are now on sale at McPherson box office.

Noon Concerts

Noon hour concerts at University of Victoria's MacLaurin Building next week include a piano recital promoted by the Student Union on Tuesday and a concert by the Victoria Trio on Thursday.

Concerts are free and commence at 12:30 p.m. lasting approximately one hour.

CHORAL CONCERT

For its first concert in 1970, Victoria Musical Art Society will present the B.C. Telephone Chorale of Vancouver in concert, assisted by Victoria harpist Lorna Langley.

The concert is scheduled for Sunday, Jan. 25 at 2:30 p.m. in McPherson Playhouse.

The chorale was formed 15 years ago and has performed in various centres throughout British Columbia and also on radio and television. It has been featured with both the Vancouver and Victoria Symphony Orchestras.

Conductor Leslie W. Monk directed major choirs in Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto before coming west to Vancouver where he founded the present ensemble which has grown to 80 voices and has become recognized as one of the finest choirs in Western Canada.

Their Musical Art program will consist of classical selections from the works, of such as Bach, Haydn, Handel, Gounod and Roberton.

Two soloists appearing with the choir are soprano Bette Cosar and bass Campbell Buchanan, both of whom will sing operatic numbers.

Miss Langley, principal harpist with the Victoria Symphony, will play music by Debussy, Salzedo and Lecuona.

Beauty Treatment for a City

Looking at Art

. . . With Gordon Rice

Towns, like people, sometimes go through great changes. You can return to find them changed beyond recognition. It's usually the middle and large-size ones that undergo the more rapid transformation.

Nanaimo was formerly a coal mining town, and it has a somewhat depressed look. You notice this especially entering it from the south. In town there is an interesting waterfront district.

◆

It is here that a group of interested citizens, and the city's Advisory Planning Commission, have begun to make some noticable improvements.

Of course the usual haphazard mushrooming commercial growth of any fair-size town on a main highway and trade route has hit Nanaimo harder every year.

One sees areas bull-dozed or scheduled for razing, and scattered along the highway north of the city the usual plastic-looking commercial establishments that cover so much North American highway frontage have been thrown up.

With this (unfortunately) inevitable sort of growth, which never really makes a city look better, or more inviting, it seems there has been a less-usual, and more far-sighted kind of growth. This involves the efforts of the Planning Commission, and the efforts of a number of citizens who really seem to care for city beautification.

◆

Landscape architecting, the preservation of old houses and monuments, the sense of a town's uniqueness and the desire to save and enhance whatever is good in it, this, as Victorians are aware, is what has given Victoria a reputation that few towns in North America have.

It is pleasant to see that Nanaimo's citizens have begun to realize that this direction can be taken there too. I was not aware that the waterfront area of Nanaimo was (from an artist's point of view) that interesting.

However, a walkway is being made which makes this coastline accessible. The further development of this walkway, which should stretch for some miles up and down the coast, could very well create conditions favorable to the growth of a very pleasant waterfront and marina the likes of which one sees in many Pacific coast towns.

The promenade, just below Nanaimo's Georgia Park, is quite pleasant, but seems unnecessarily costly. A promenade which followed the contour of the coastline, such as those here below Beacon Hill Park, might do just as well, and also preserve more of the naturalness of the coastline.

Green spaces, natural formations, have been spared here and there along the waterfront and in town as well and are being pleasantly developed in some cases.

◆

Anyone who has spent much time in towns such as Los Angeles or Oakland knows how grim a town becomes when such green, "breathing" spaces have been plowed over or paved. In the long run this type of "progress" brings fast money but eventual dullness and ugliness, and a town no one is inspired to improve or maintain.

The channel between the town and the impressive Newcastle Island Park is of course a very choice area, as yet undeveloped. One sees part of this area, coming in on the ferries, and notices that the bay and the islands are indeed the most attractive feature of the area.

Any development done in this area should of course be done with the utmost concern toward conservation and esthetic considerations. Departure Bay and the surrounding waters have so far escaped the tragic commercial misuse, which has destroyed so much of the San Francisco Bay area.

Nanaimo has a small museum, beautifully situated on a tiny hill overlooking the bay, and I was sorry to find it wasn't open of a Sunday.

◆

Meanwhile, good painting and sculpture lie unused and unseen in the basements of the Vancouver and Victoria art galleries, for lack of space to show them!

And Indian art, which we have in plenty, authentic and important, is yet to be prominently displayed in the civic buildings and open areas of any Vancouver Island town.

Nanaimo has, for instance, a striking Petroglyph displayed before the museum (it needs some protection!), and some very nice reproductions of petroglyphs displayed nearby.

This is only one step in the right direction. There is enough British Columbian Indian art to fill a museum in every good-size town in the province, and all the civic buildings as well and this would certainly be a fitting thing to see.

Winding through the downtown area one notices some gaily-colored sidewalks; for stretches this seems effective, but the effect is getting a bit overdone.

I was told that the candy-colored sidewalk will eventually replace all the gray ones there. That would be a bit of gaudiness the town could do without.

Is "Prodigy" the right word for her?

Mari - Elizabeth Morgen, the featured soloist at the next Symphony concerts this Sunday and Monday, has been acclaimed as a top-ranking pianist since her early childhood. She captured awards, prizes and scholarships before her tenth birthday . . . at 10, the Frederick Harris Company published four of her piano compositions! And her early promise has been more than redeemed by later performance.

Small wonder then, that Laszlo Gati, music director and conductor of the Victoria Symphony, leapt at the chance to have her appear in Victoria. The winner of the Bach International Competition can pick and choose between concert dates, and Miss Morgen's visit to Victoria reflects the new lustre of Symphony '70. Concert-goers are assured of an outstanding musical treat, for both orchestra and soloist have been drawing rave reviews from usually hard - to - please critics. James Backas, of Washington, D.C., hailed the Canadian pianist as a "major young talent . . . very distinguished and exciting"—and local critics are united in their appreciation of the Victoria Symphony Orchestra's "great leap forward".

All in all, this first concert of 1970 looks like a fitting start to a decade of great music. The program includes Haydn's Symphony No. 94 in G major, commonly known as the "Surprise"; Mozart's Concerto for Piano in C minor, and the overture and excerpts from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn.

Many Ways for Full Theatre Life

Sounding Board

. . . By Audrey Johnson

Youthful ambitions don't always work out. Neither do shining intentions.

Like the pattern in the sand that changes with the full tide and the wind, we all shift about and adopt new perspectives to meet the forces of circumstance.

But some people come back full circle to the objective with which they started, even though the pattern re-drawn may not be exactly as originally conceived.

It's like that with Patricia Wainman-Wood.

She is the actress who will be playing the love-hate-driven wife in The Father which is the second University of Victoria-Theatre Guild collaborative production, opening at Langham Court Jan. 31.

•

Among the audiences attending the eight-night run there are almost certain to be some people who saw Pat act on a Victoria stage some 20 years ago.

They may not recall exactly where or in what production.

But anyone who saw the one-time Players' Guild presentation of The Barretts of Wimpole Street or Fools Rush In during the 1949-50 seasons, saw the then teen-aged actress as Elizabeth Barretts' coquettish cousin and as Pam, the vivacious heroine of the latter comedy.

Immediately after that successful production the Players' Guild, which had been a break-away from the Victoria Little Theatre, re-united with the older club and formed the present Theatre Guild.

•

But Patricia, whose home was at Cowichan, decided to suspend her education at Victoria College and go to London to audition for the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art.

She succeeded in that long step but never finished her final term because she was auditioned and selected for the role of Wendy in a company that was to tour the United States playing Peter Pan and Shakespeare.

A number of theatrical ventures, one marriage and one child later, the former Patricia Atkinson, whose professional career has been followed under the name Patricia Leith, is now back in this city and a visiting lecturer at the institution that was once Victoria College.

So her career has come round full circle, but at the same time spiralled upward and seen her achieve the desires she expressed in a meeting we had 18 years ago when she was on a brief visit before taking off on the American tour chapter.

Her positive, forthright nature and quick intelligence had even then dismissed as chimera the fame and glamor most budding actresses seek. She was, and still is, in love with theatre as a full-time occupation and an enthralling profession.

•

As she points out and so clearly demonstrates: "There are many ways to live a full life in the theatre other than by being a star."

In that interview done with her at the beginning of her career there appear these words: "She plans and hopes to continue her career, not in England nor the United States, but right here in Canada. Pat's real and admirable desire is to grow with Canadian theatre . . ."

•

And that's exactly what she has done.

After achieving a considerable degree of personal success in Clare Tree Major's American company as Wendy and as Ann Boleyn in Shakespeare's Henry VIII, Patricia returned to Canada.

She then played principal roles in summer stock with Ian Thorne's Lancaster Players in Penticton's Theatre by Starlight, toured B.C. and Alberta as the lead in the comedy, The Moon is Blue and shared critical accolades with Edward Everet Horton in Springtime for Henry at Vancouver's Avon Theatre.

Marriage to Tony Wainman-Wood, took her to Halifax where she worked in radio and television and with an amateur group, until a move to Kingston, Ont., triggered a decision to return to university.

•

A BA degree at Queens University in English and Drama lead to a teaching post at Queens where she specialized in teaching the English language to foreign students and worked with theatre students until coming to Uvic last summer.

Pat now makes her home with her 11-year-old son, Hugh, at 3755 Cadboro Bay Road and teaches one section of the first year acting class and all four years of speech.

Vibrant, with a glinting sense of humor, 20 years have dealt lightly with Pat, perhaps because she has succeeded so much better than most of us in realizing her youthful dream.

Hamlet Role Scheduled For Actress

By LOUIS CALTA

NEW YORK — To be or not to be Hamlet has been the long-time question for Dame Judith Anderson.

Now the 71-year-old performer, the first Australian actress to be elevated to the most excellent Order of the British Empire, is about to achieve her desire. She has agreed to play the melancholy Dane in a full-scale production that will tour the United States, visiting colleges and universities.

"I've always wanted to do it for a great number of years, but something always happened," she said in an interview.

"I started thinking about it in the 1950s. In fact, I was virtually set to do it for Leonard Sillman, but it did not come to pass because of something not to my liking in the projected production."

NOT THE FIRST

Dame Judith is not the first actress to play Hamlet. Sarah Bernhardt, Eva Le Gallienne, Eleanora Duse and Siobhan McKenna also have.

Why Hamlet for someone whose career includes some of the theatre's most formidable and tragedy-racked heroines?

ANDERSON

The diminutive, red-haired, blue-eyed actress pondered the question in her suite at the St. Regis-Sheraton. She is staying there temporarily to be on hand for the New York Cultural Centre's current retrospective exhibition honoring George Schaeffer, producer-director.

"It's mine," she replied, "the majority of great parts are written for men; the minds of men are more exciting than the minds of women. They have greater scope of power, imagination, kindness and brutality.

"All the emotions seem to be keyed high for the male roles. I don't think of Hamlet as either male or female. It encompasses every emotional note on the scale."

Dame Judith says she does not have any intention of "pitting myself against the great Hamlets" of such performers as Sir Johhn Gielgud, Maurice Evans or others.

Hoffman and Farrow . . . A story about nothing

Does Anyone Care About John and Mary?

By RUSSELL BAKER

The problems that the new frankness can get a movie-maker into are illustrated in a Dustin-Hoffman-Mia Farrow film called "John and Mary."

For 90 minutes or longer, we are expected to care whether John and Mary will eat a fish dinner at John's place at the end of the movie. Who cares? Well, there must be a masochist somewhere — the Vice-President says the country is crawling with them — who can get involved, but he doesn't count.

The problem — will John and Mary share that fish in the refrigerator? — is dullness brought to perfection.

"John and Mary" is the kind of film that used to be called a vehicle; that is, a device for keeping a star's face before the public until someone could provide him with a decent film script.

Big-studio Hollywood made some entertaining vehicles in its prime out of the same sort of material that goes into "John and Mary."

The basic formula was: boy meets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl. In "John and Mary," the formula is crippled for yet another celebration of the new frankness. Boy has already got girl before film even starts.

★ ★ ★

This makes it possible for the movie to open with the quintessential scene of the new-frankness era. Boy and girl in bed. In fact, they are waking up after several hours in bed.

We immediately understand that boy met girl for the first time the night before and never lost her for a moment. In short, we are seeing the epilogue to a nonstory.

After the frankness of the opening, the movie makers are in trouble. We all knew in the old movies that after boy met girl, lost girl and got girl, they lived happily ever after, and we didn't want to see them do it because there are few things duller to watch in a movie than two people living happily ever after.

Such people have a few misunderstandings, eat many uninteresting meals and hold conversations of negligible interest to anyone outside their circle.

Most of us familiar with persons who are living happily ever after know that they will probably have dinner together most evenings, though a few may get divorces.

★ ★ ★

"John and Mary" begins with John and Mary starting this dreary business of living happily ever after. Sure enough, they have a few misunderstandings, eat some extremely uninteresting meals and hold conversations of absolutely no interest at all.

The big question is whether Mary will stay for dinner because that will tell us whether it's the real thing between her and John, whatever that will lead to. There is no question of its leading to anything as square as marriage, naturally, what with all the new frankness they are being photographed in.

The audience knows Mary will stay to dinner, of course, not only because they are Dustin Hoffman and Mia Farrow and because this movie is just a vehicle, but also because they have been behaving all along just like people we know who are living happily ever after and dining together every evening, instead of like people who get divorces.

In short, nothing happens. We have been had. The people who made this movie probably think we had our money's worth in the opening scene with that matter-of-fact, cool, innocent new frankness and its coy suggestion that seduction and having an ice cream soda after the prom are all the same in the age of enlightenment.

They are wrong. The new frankness is no longer worth $2.60. Witnessing motion pictures of two persons between sheets, be they active or passive, may be amusing when novel, but lately the new frankness has been flickering inexorably, invariably, predictably, inescapably, relentlessly and — worst of all — familiarly on every movie screen in town.

The hard-core is dull enough, what with all the dreary, redeeming social significance one has to take with it. The innocent is indefensible.

★ ★ ★

The adolescents who insist that violence on screen is immoral while lovemaking is not are perfectly right, but this is no argument for either banning violence or increasing the output of filmed lovemaking.

For moral elevation we have the church; at the theatre we want entertainment, and the fact is that, for an audience at least, the immoral act is likely to trigger more engaging drama than the act of love.

'I've Had Plenty of Funny Lines'

By GRANVILLE WATTS

LONDON — Sir Laurence Olivier, Britain's premier actor, sipped a glass of champagne and said: "Retire? They'll have to kick me out first."

Sir Laurence, 62, answered questions about future projects in London while announcing this week that he will take 31 actors and staff of Britain's National Theatre Company for the first visit to the United States at the end of the month.

Olivier's British company opens at the Ahmanson Theatre, Los Angeles, Tuesday with the English restoration play The Beaux Strategem. This will be followed with a three-week run begining Feb. 9 by Olivier's production of Chekov's The Three Sisters.

OLIVIER

Olivier will not be appearing in the plays, saying that he has too many commitments in London at the moment.

He is busy putting the finishing touches to his film The Three Sisters and has the day-to-day running of the National Theatre here to look after.

"It's well known that the best recent successes of the National Theatre have been plays that I didn't appear in," he said.

Olivier, who recovered from cancer of the prostate in 1968, looked fit and spry and talked freely with reporters.

"I've always felt that comedy touches the human situation better than tragedy," he said.

"One of my favorite roles was as the failed comedian in John Osborne's The Entertainer.

"There's one line in that where the wife looks at me and says 'He's funny.' I like that to be my epitaph. You can tell Westminster Abbey.

"It's well known that the best comedians make the best tragedians," Olivier said. "In tragedy you can stretch the elastic of a drama situation so far—then you have to break the tension, preferably by getting a laugh.

"But I'm not a frustrated comedian. I've had plenty of funny lines."

Olivier confessed that there are no roles in the theatre he still wants to play.

'Surprise' At Symphony

Resumption of the 1969-70 Victoria Symphony season gets under way Sunday afternoon with a program featuring Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, No. 94 and Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream music.

Soloist in Mozart's C minor Piano Concerto is the impressive Canadian pianist Mari-Elizabeth Morgen.

With Laszlo Gati conducting the Sunday concert begins at 3 p.m. at the Royal Theatre. There will be a repeat performance Monday at 8:30 p.m.

On Wednesday, at 8:30 p.m. at McPherson Playhouse, Miss Morgen will perform the Bach Goldberg Variations. This was the work which brought her top place in the Johann Sebastian Bach International Competition at Washington, D.C., in 1968.

She will also play a Sonata by Canadian composer T. Kenins and the Chopin Scherzo in B-flat minor.

Diary of the Anarchist Prince A Document of Great Humanity

By PETER McNELLY

Anarchy suggested a state of being to Prince Peter Kropotkin as forcefully as the same idea might suggest a state of siege to a politician.

The 1860s began in Russia with expectations of rapid and wide-ranging changes in society. Movement toward guaranteeing civil and political rights to all citizens peaked with hopes that Czar Alexander II would create a constitutional government.

The liberation of the serfs, an issue which had been brewing since the mid-1850s, was an accomplished fact — by 1863. Women had begun to pressure for and achieve greater opportunities in education. Territorial discoveries in Manchuria and Siberia added extra excitement to plans to reform the provincial governments.

MEMOIRS OF A REVOLUTIONIST by Peter Kropotkin. Smithers and Bonellie. $13.50.

Into this atmosphere of liberal optimism came young Peter Kropotkin, son of an army officer, trained in military school and a page in Alexander II's court.

A brilliant student, Kropotkin became a geographer at university; and his desire to study the land first-hand led to his eventual willing transfer to a post in Siberia.

While there the young prince had an opportunity to build a professional reputation and observe the long bureaucratic delays between policy-making in St. Petersburg and policy-execution in the hinterlands.

Kropotkin filed details of both the natural and political landscape, intending to publish his accounts of them when he returned eventually to St. Petersburg. But in 1863 the Poles rebelled against Russian rule and the thaw which seemed to be forcing Russia into the modern world promptly froze back into the authoritarianism of Alexander's predecessor Nicholas I.

The Russians ruthlessly crushed the Polish insurgents, and the wave of reaction which followed the rebellion effectively prevented further liberalization.

Kropotkin soon lost faith in centralized government as every vestige of liberalism evaporated in the first of a series of political purges.

■

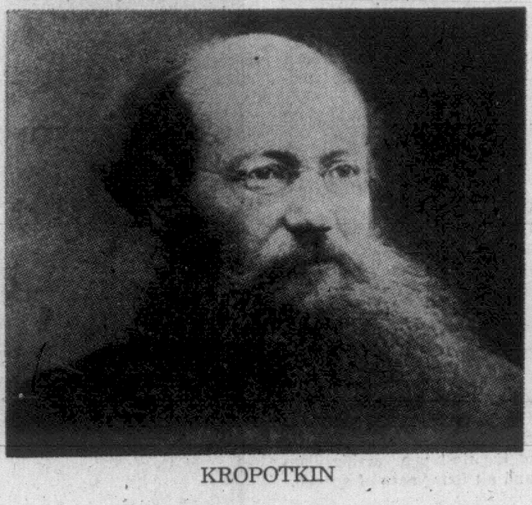
By 1871 he had reached a point where he had to choose between science and activism. His natural idealism chose the latter. After his departure from Russia to Zurich, Kropotkin met several Russian political exiles, among them Bakunin, participated in the International Workingmen's Association and joined the anarchist Jura Federation.

Having experienced an environment amenable to his democratic sensibilities, Kropotkin returned to Russia a confirmed revolutionary.

That is, he returned to Russia determined to agitate for social justice and education no matter what barriers the state placed in his way. For by the 1870s, Alexander II was fully under the influence of reactionary advisers. Russia was heading toward a police state again.

This long but excellently crafted autobiography narrates Peter Kropotkin's development and experiences as soldier, scientist, courtier, revolutionary, prisoner and exile. Rich in a great range of anecdotes and situations, the book is both a panorama of late Nineteenth Century politics and a personal document of great humanity.

Like so many great Russians, Kropotkin's strongest atttibute is compassion. But his writing is characterised by a balanced appraisal of people and events which makes very convincing reading.



KROPOTKIN

While never being didactic, he is capable of deep understanding. Countless reflections on his own times have relevance to today. For example he observed that mass organization techniques would squeeze the life out of reform movements. In counselling revolutionaries to win support of the poor before beginning the revolution, Kropotkin precourses Mao Tzetung, Fidel Castro and Regis Debray.

This book originally appeared serially in "The Atlantic Monthly" in 1899, but has now been compiled in expanded form and published as a unit.

Memoirs of a Revolutionist is as important to students of political history as it is to those who would become dedicated revolutionaries.

As history it amplifies many details surrounding the complicated development of socialist thought and action in Russia. Kropotkin explains his multi-levelled understanding of various forms of socialist behavior: anarchism, trade-unionism, social democracy, Marxism, and terrorism.

But the Memoirs derive their greatest power through the character of their author. Kropotkin's brand of anarchism is predicated upon a confidence — even joy — in man's power to co-operate spontaneously with his brothers.

His anarchism banishes coercion and greed. Like all great idealists Kropotkin transmits enthusiasm and hope. He humanises everything he discusses.

Skeptics might feel that the prince overestimates the human race, but in expecting no less from experience than the excellence he radiates in his prose, Kropotkin reveals himself a true aristocrat.

Artist Honored or Hounded

By PETER MURRAY

Essentially this is a book of pictures — and very fine ones they are too, by the gifted photographer Inge Morath. Her individualistic scenes give a fresh view of Russia's people and landscape, something other than the usual onion-domed churches and bundled peasants.

But it is the slender text by Miss Morath's husband, who happens to be playwright Arthur Miller, that gives this volume a special value.

Miller is a rational, compassionate man, and that is something to be prized in these days of hasty judgment and hysterical reaction. His brief assessment of life in the Soviet Union is cool and balanced, revealing a deep appreciation of the Russian people's long struggle for a better life.

He was in Russia partly in his capacity as president of on international organization of writers and is concerned with examining the role of the artist in Soviet life, which also provides a look at the larger forces at work within Russia and its estrangement from the western world.

As a champion of artistic freedom Miller condemns the pressures imposed on Russian writers and the censorship of work which criticizes or raises fundamental questions about the regime.

But he does so with an awareness that there are certain valid reasons if not justification for this policy, and admits that our boast of free expression sometimes has a hollow ring.

"In the West, where everything in art is allowed," Miller says, "the artists feel unneeded by society, supercargo. Here (in Russia), the repression is a mark of art's importance, otherwise why would government bother policing it? In which setting is the artist closer to reality?"

IN RUSSIA by Inge Morath and Arthur Miller. Macmillan. $16.25.

Nowhere else in the world are writers so close to being worshipped by their readers, he adds. "Nowhere does a regime go to such extremes to honor or hound them."

Miller points out that "any claim to the autonomy of art must collapse when a people is in danger or struggling to preserve itself, and the single theme of Soviet political and social discourse for half a century has been its imminent peril before foreign and domestic enemies."

As a writer who had his own troubles with the Un-American Activities Committee of Congress in the 1950s, Miller knows all about this kind of thinking in his own country.

And so today in Russia there are many sincere conservative writers who take pride in working with the Communist party and genuinely fear that the aims of the state will be lost if individualism is allowed in the arts.

But here is the paradox. The writers most distrusted are not unpatriotic. "I have never known such love of country in any literary men," says Miller.

As for the argument that the state must act to block the flood of pornography which threatens to submerge western culture, Miller finds that this "rubric of morality" keeps out of print some of the best work in the Soviet Union.

But this is more than an essay on artistic freedom. Just as Inge Morath's camera catches candid glimpses of Russians at work and play, so Miller the playwright has a keen eye for the little things that mark the human condition.

Although there are differences in national characteristics, such as the Russians' deep-seated peasant outlook and slower adaptation to 20th century urban life, the common things binding us together can be spotted by the perceptive observer.

In the perpetually-long line of people waiting in Red Square to view Lenin's mummified body Miller watched a Mongolian Red Army officer with his girl or wife.

"Enduring the icy air without flinching, their slant eyes expressionless, they stood a quarter-mile from the tomb in silence. She was dressed in a short fur coat and a big hat or red fox, her rubber boots had curved tops ending just at mid-calf. A strangely chic and sexy emanation from the changeless East.

"Suddenly she started to snap her fingers rhythmically, holding them out in front of her, and then did a series of rock-and-roll steps to get warm. The officer looked at her, laughed — a real New York laugh — and joined her by snapping his fingers to the same beat. Then they subsided and went on waiting to see Lenin."

Black America Fights to Cut 'Colony' Bonds

By BOB MITCHELL

"A slave who dies of natural causes will not balance two dead flies on the scale of eternity." Eldridge Cleaver.

Eldridge Cleaver has described America as two entities, a black colony and a white mother country, both contained within the same geographical boundaries.

Harlem, for example, is a striking example of an urban colony exploited by the white merchants and property owners of New York.

THE BLACK PANTHERS by Gene Marine. Signet Paperback. 95 cents.

Pursuing the mother country-colony concept, white police who patrol the black ghettos are occupying troops. The Black Panthers have declared they are prepared to kill police in self-defence. They are freecom fighters, and several have been killed or murdered by the police during the last three years.

Gene Marine, a Ramparts Magazine reporter, has attempted to explain the Black Panther Party For Self-Defense, and this paperback is intended to counter some of the misinformation propagated intentionally or unintentionally by the news media.

The events he relates span roughly a three-year period from the spring of 1965, when the party was founded in Oakland, to the end of 1968. It's all fascinating and chilling background to events of 1969 that climaxed last month in Chicago with the killing of Fred Hampton.

■

Within the white power structure of America policemen are right, and anyone charged with killing or maiming a cop must attempt to prove his innocence against rather staggering legal odds.

"But in another way, white racist America does support its local police, for the continuing pattern of bigotry in blue would not be possible without a subtler racism behind it, paying for it, and refusing to look at it."

Marine sympathizes with the Panthers in the same way people all over the world sympathized with Czech and Hungarian freedom fighters. But as a white man he is afraid of the implications of the movement.

"And whatever may be said of policemen in America — whatever may be said of white America generally — it cannot be brushed aside that much of the Panther rhetoric is based on the simple necessity to kill; to kill policemen, to kill Uncle Toms, to kill anyone, ultimately, who stands in the way of black liberation. Possibly what frightens me most about it is that I have no valid arguments against it."

■

A final chapter on racism sheds some light on a subject that has consistently puzzled and frustrated liberals. Racism is usually mistaken for bigotry, and it's important to distinguish between the two.

Someone who believes persons of other races are biologically or mentally inferior to his own is bigoted.

Racism is much harder to define because it's built into the structure of white society, and unwittingly promoted through the media by that growing social appendage, the marketing researchers.

White is associated with virtue, black with evil. Standards of female beauty are white, and then, of course, there's whiter wash, whiter teeth and whiter white.

Liberals, which includes those of us who supported the civil rights movement and contributed to the Biafran children's fund, never recognized something called black reality.

The message of the television show "Julia" is that black people have the same experiences, look at life the same way as white.

The message of the Black Panthers is that black experience is not the same as white experience; that the accumulation of history, law and technology that white people embrace as their way of life may not necessarily be acceptable to black people.

CHILDREN'S READING

Fear, Love and Death Reality for Them, Too

By JUDI FREEMAN

Choosing a book for a child is almost as difficult as writing a book for young readers.

A child's mind is ever changing and growing and his consuming interest in mystery novels may suddenly turn to "how to" books or science fiction. He may be thrilled with Dr. Seuss today and curious about Huck Finn tomorrow.

Parents hope that "this time" they've guessed right. The author hopes that his story and style are suitable to the group for whom he is writing.

How to choose a book, once the topic or age group is established, is a little easier. What the parent should be concerned about is the amount of satisfaction a particular book will give the child without worrying about whether it is a "great" book or up-to-date or informative.

There are several broad elements this reviewer looks for when reading "children's literature."

Will this book stimulate the child's imagination?

Ofen, we ignore fairy tales and folk-lore because of their superstitious or fanciful traits but a child can imagine that he flies with Peter Pan to Never-Never Land. And he can stride over mountain tops with the giants in Adrien Stoutenburg's Fee, Fi, Fo, Fum, reviewed below.

Will the book arouse the child's emotions?

A flaccid book about nice children who do nice things Dick-and-Jane style will produce half-hearted readers. Too many authors reject the idea that the facts of life can have a place in children's literature.

Fear, jealousy, love and death are children's realities. Why ignore them in books? The classic, The Secret Garden, is adult-like in its use of emotion. Rage, temper tantrums, self-centredness and even pity are scattered through the pages, which is perhaps why the story has survived a century in print.

Will the book utilize the child's capacity for curiosity?

A child, stimulated to wonder how Doctor Dolittle could talk to the animals, increases his ability to wonder about many different things. Inquisitiveness is part of the learning process.

A book which actively engages the mind, whether it is fictional or educational, is a book which will be read by a child without pressure by well-meaning adults.

Total involvement without the jazz and pizazz of the op-art bookery . . . that's John Burningham's Seasons. It's a gentle romp with unfolding Nature from spring to winter through the artist's collection of seasonal scenes and minimal text.

SEASONS by John Burningham. Clarke, Irwin. $5.95.

And when the book has been pored over and talked about, the young reader can take out four large posters and put them on the wall, gay decorations guaranteed to give visual enjoyment.

Although the posters are removed from the book, this does not destroy the continuity. It will still be the same superb picture book for children. Up to 10 years.

MR. ALEXANDER AND THE WITCH by Emmy West and Christine Govan. Illustrated by Leonard Shortall. Macmillan. $6.25.

It all begins on Page 12, first page of Chapter One, where the Wilson children are introduced.

Then on Page 13 the postman comes and Mrs. Wilson gasps, "Oh no!"

By this time you feel the suspense building. Even though Daniel Prince is mopping up on Monopoly real estate and Molly Bradford from next door has just lost two apartment buildings, the entire game comes to an abrupt halt.

What is the matter?

Page 14 reveals all: Uncle Bill is sending a friend, Mr. Alexander, to stay with the Wilsons and Mrs. Wilson is understandably upset: her old-maid aunt is also coming to stay and what is she going to do?

Well, by now we're fairly galloping through the book and at Page 16 the entire family has gone to the airport to meet this Mr. Alexander.

The kids are thrilled at the mood of excitement of the airport but it begins to wear thin waiting for the late jet. Lisa Wilson flounces into a seat to stare at the incoming planes just as the flight is announced.

This is it. Mr. Alexander is finally here.

"Lisa sat up straight and watched the great silver plane swoop down ever so gently and roll across the almost empty . . . ."

Oops, what happened to tarmac? As a matter of fact what happened to Page 17? As we glance hurriedly at the page, Page 81 shows up as do pages 82 through to 96.

Quick, shuffle to where Page 81 should go and find out what happens next. The suspense is unbearable. But there it is — Page 81 and 82 and 83 and . . .

And we sadly discover that the story resumes on Page 33 where the Wilson kids are trying to shove Mr. Alexander into a crate without his hollering too much.

Somewhere along the line, we missed something.

However, as the jacket blurb tells us, Mr. Alexander is a monkey and the remainder of the book is how the monkey's curiosity brings the Wilsons and their friends a lively summer of super-sleuthing.

Despite the physical error in the book, which we hope the publishers caught quickly, the book is an entertaining one. The two authors have written 18 children's books together and many more on their own. Ages 9-12.

THE DOLL SNATCHERS by Norma Kassirer. Illustrated by Donald A. Mackay. Macmillan. $5.50.

A whimsical novel to be sure but a good change from the cops and robbers scene. April and Clary come to spend the summer in Snarksville and stumble into the mystery of the disappearing dolls.

Clary sees the not-too-bright villain in the middle of a doll-snatching episode and the two youngsters enlist the aid of the village children. Villain Putney Witherton's downfall is the French Mechanical Doll escapade.

What makes the story even better is that it is a look-back through the eyes of Putney himself who is living in the Home For Retired Villains. Ages 9-12.

JOAN OF ARC by Winston Churchill. Illustrations by Lauren Ford. Dodd, Mead. $3.50.

At first glance a children's Joan of Arc book taken from the four-volume A History of the English-Speaking Peoples by Winston Churchill seems strange. But once read, the book will become a pleasant addition to any child's library.

Churchill's flowing poetic prose about the young woman who broke England's stranglehold on 15th century France with her fervent faith is a reminder that not all history makes dull reading.

The text is accompanied by 17 full-color illustrations by Lauren Ford. All ages.

THE BALLOONING ADVENTURES OF PADDY PORK by John S. Goodall. Macmillan. $1.75.

John S. Goodall has come up with a goody this time. With pen and ink he has drawn an enchanting picture story of the perils of Paddy Pork.

Paddy leaves his mother and vine-covered cottage to see the world via his flying machine. The hero rescues a heroine from cannibals. She in turn rescues him from what could be Sasquatches. And they return home in triumph.

This is a good "imagining" book for younger readers. Up to 10 years.

JONAH AND THE LORD by George MacBeth. Illustrated by Margaret Gordon. Macmillan. $3.25.

Those parents who enjoyed reading their children's edition of the MacBeth-Gordon Noah's Journey have another good excuse to browse through children's literature.

Jonah and the Whale is a biblical tale, yes, but MacBeth's lively stanzas take the preachiness out of the moral and make it a folk-tale worth understanding.

Mrs. Gordon's illustrations are bold and match the enthusiastic poetry. She says the great fish of the Bible is "a whale with a difference." Up to 10 years.

FEE, FI, FO, FUM by Adrien Stoutenburg. Illustrations by Rocco Negri. Macmillan. $6.25.

Fee, Fi, Fo, Fum won't curdle the blood of little ones. It's a collection of tales about seven friendly and funny giants who have their problems.

We are most familiar with European giant stories so it is refreshing to find the Greek mythological figure, Antaeus of Africa, whose friends were six inches tall and Manabozho, the North American Indian whose father ruled the West Wind and his brothers the North, South and East.

Each tale is taken from folk culture of seven countries and carefully reflects that culture. The book would make ideal reading to younger children or as a reader for ages 9-12.

She's a Star And Separatist

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD — After a few years in Hollywood one develops a talent for distinguishing between a pretty starlet and an actress headed for major stardom.

The difference is clearly apparent in Genevieve Bujold, who co-stars with Richard Burton in Anne of the Thousand Days.

Genevieve is dark-haired, brown-eyed, slender and intense.

But she must be seen to be appreciated. There is a vibrance about the girl, a sense of excitement of which stars are made. Better still, she is apparently unaware of it all.

Genevieve is a French-Canadian beauty who is thoroughly French in breeding, background and temperament. She believes devoutly in making Quebec a separate, independent nation.

Her eyes flash angrily at mention of the English Canadians.

"English is not my mother tongue," she said. "But I must say that English is more precise and goes to the point more directly than French. I am that way myself.

■

"But I believe in freedom for French-Canadians. It is unfair that our country make us bilingual. We French-Canadians must learn to speak English. But the English-Canadians are not made to speak French."

When she becomes excited, Genevieve, who is in her mid-20s, finds herself using French words. Her accent becomes more pronounced.

Fortunately she needn't worry about running her French and English together when she is working.

"As an actress there is a mechanism that prevents me from slipping into a French accent," she said. "And it is curious, but when I am making a picture in France, I don't have to fear that my Canadian accent will pop up."

In all, Genevieve has made eight movies. Two were English language films made in Canada. Three were made in France with French dialogue. Another three were filmed in Canada in French.

There isn't the slightest trace of Gallic accent in her latest and most important movie, in which she plays Anne Boleyn.

In the movie she more than holds her own with the stentorian Welshman who buys those million-dollar baubles for Elizabeth Taylor.

16,000 Movie Reviews!

By VINCENT CANBY

NEW YORK—For the last several months, in the evenings and on weekends, I've been taking a long, hallucinating trip in short, prosy hops, pushing my way through most—but by no means all—of the approximately 16,000 New York Times movie reviews (1913-1968 that will be published in six volumes later this year.

The price of the collection—$395—is such that it will not be the sort of thing most families, or even film buffs, will be able to afford.

•

Still, if you care enough, you might want to browse through it at the public library or at a school or at a research concern.

Quite simply, there has never been anything like it—the record of the growth of a popular art, begun a few years after its (still disputed) birth, written as it was happening, sometimes with bland reportorial objectivity, sometimes with amusement and condescension, occasionally with moral outrage and concern, and often with surprising insight.

It's a remarkable archive of names, titles, dates and plots, as well as of the points of view of reporters who wrote in anonymity until Oct. 6, 1924.

•

For some years before then, the Times' reviewers had been expressing opinions that assumed the public's avid interest in the medium.

"That is the joy of movies," wrote the man who reviewed "The Raiders" in 1916. "The movies were meant for wild flights of fancy and space."

Today that statement still holds, although our definitions of fancy and space have been considerably expanded to meet the demands of such different directors as Jean Renoir, Jerry Lewis, Ingmar Bergman, John Ford, Sergei Eisenstein, Luis Bunuel, Jean-Luc Godard and James Whale.

Because every reporter—every writer, for that matter—tends to write as if all civilized progress had suddenly come to crisis at the moment of writing (thus demanding a sweeping summary of all that has gone before), there are lots of general statements in the collected reviews that, in hindsight seem a little ridiculous.

•

"A motion picture stands or falls by the measure of its interior scenes," wrote the man who reviewed Cecil B. DeMille's "Joan The Woman" in 1916. "Any director can photograph nature and have it look real and artistic, but not everyone can give a semblance of life to an interior scene. Too palpably they are things of paint and canvas, tasteless and tawdry, and with no illusion of solidity or reality. . . ."

Those of us today who care about movies, and for whom movies are a part of our emotional history, couldn't care less whether or not the scenery shakes when a teenage Mary Pickford slams a door, or even if it's perfectly apparent in, say, an Alfred Hitchcock film, that that man and woman hanging over the face of Mount Rushmore really are in a Hollywood studio and not in South Dakota.

•

After looking at movies all our lives, we know there can be something more to them than the mere illusion of a physical reality.

I was rather amazed to learn that people were turning out sex hygiene films as early as 1914 and that a few years later one producer made a film warning young girls of the perils of riding in taxi cabs without proper escort—they might be drugged and sold into white slavery—which is odd, since as late as the 1930s producers were making movies that looked nostalgically back to the days of black slavery.

Much more interesting to me, however, are the early references to movie giants. One of Charlie Chaplin's first entries is oblique; it's a review of his brother Syd's film, "Pirate Submarine" (1915), and is rather like meeting someone before he has become famous, yet knowing that he will become famous.

•

Chaplin's first films were shorts, and did not receive reviews in the Times. It is, however, apparent that in 1915 he was a major screen personality, if only because Syd is identified as his brother.

'New York Theatre Struggling To Escape Real Estate Sharks'

By HERBERT WHITTAKER

TORONTO—"All of my plays are part of me. All of them explore certain fundamental preoccupations. They are kind of chapters which I recognize in retrospect."

Arthur Miller is answering a question he has often fielded, the autobiographical content of that succession of successful dramas he has contributed to the U.S. stage since 1946.

In that year, All My Sons won the Critics Circle Award. His one previous Broadway play, The Man Who Had All the Luck, had run four performances in 1944, but his novel, Focus, won acclaim in 1945.

In 1948 came Death of a Salesman, taking the Pulitzer Prize and all others in sight.

★ ★ ★

"Ibsen says his plays are his biography," Miller continued, talking from his farm in Roxbury, Conn. "Or was tha Strindberg? After you've been writing for over 30 years, the concerns of the dramatist must inevitably be recognizable."

Does Miller have preferences among those stage chapters?

"Well, Death of a Salesman had the best production and won the greatest notice. The Crucible is the most produced of my plays today, although it was not accounted a great success at first.

"That was all about the best-kept secret of the time. The terror that existed under (U.S. Senator Joseph) McCarthy.

"Another play which had less success on Broadway than it did later on was A View From the Bridge. It is played by 25 repertory companies."

Had he any plays he feels were never sufficiently appreciated?

"In America, After the Fall."

He evidently still feels the hurt from the dismissal of this one, which also dealt with the McCarthy investigations. It also dealt with the rise and fall of a popular star, a figure the audience easily identified with Marilyn Monroe, to whom Miller had been married and divorced, although Miller always denied the connection flatly.

MILLER

Miller holds that After the Fall was dismissed as part of Broadway's rejection of the Lincoln Centre Repertory, which it opened. He feels that the other element — I had used the word sentimental in reference to the identification with the late film star — was seized on and used because of the antagonism felt against the new centre.

Miller was obviously sensitive to the rejection some of his work had received on its original Broadway showing, work that survived despite it. If the New York send-off is so unreliable what would he substitute for it?

"To open my next plays either off Broadway or launch them in different parts of the country. In California, say, and Washington. Then they would be given a chance of life before facing Broadway."

Miller has completed three one-act plays to be played under the blanket title, Behind the Times. He would not divulge the theme of the title play. Of the other two he said:

"The Reason Why is a very simple metaphorical play about killing. Fame is just that; what fame does to the people who have it. It's not really autobiographical: the conditions apply to anybody who is famous.

★ ★ ★

"I don't know where to do them. I would like to see them done where there is more of a sense of play than in New York, away from the tension of big business, somewhere where the costs aren't astronomical and people aren't betting whether they'll run three years."

Miller feels that the New York theatres are fighting to keep off the real estate sharks:

"No city can stand those pressures forever. Certainly New York can't. Perhaps it's because we're more developed as a city. But perhaps that's the wrong word. Perhaps the right one may be decayed. At any rate, New York suffers from its advanced state of something.

"There's a better balance of costs in London, although they are rising there. The Price in London cost between $25,000 and $30,000 compared to the original Broadway cost of $90,000. The Broadway costs are inflated beyond the market."

The problem, as Miller sees it, is that the Broadway theatre is organized as though it were mass entertainment, which it has not been since talking pictures came in.

"The only proper development I can see is a subsidized theatre, existing alongside private theatre, each doing what it can do best. the private theatre doing the musicals and light comedies — the painless theatre.

"This has its value. It has a right to exist. It has invented a great deal. It has developed a great many artists who should be working."

He denies that the lack of dramatic stars is the cause of the parlous conditions of what might be called the painful theatre. There are as many as ever, but where is opportunity for them to work?

Miller is providing, as in the past, opportunity and work for dramatic talent in Behind the Times. It requires two major actresses. If he stages the plays off Broadway, where theatres are limited to 299 seats, he won't be able to pay for performers of the stature the play needs.

★ ★ ★

Miller has been taking the direction of his plays quite seriously. This began when The Price was facing its Broadway opening. The director, Ulla Grossbart, was let go and Miller took over. His decision to run its two acts without a break was a major contribution to its acceptance as a play.

He had once directed All My Sons in summer stock. Then re-directed The Crucible for Broadway, another important contribution being made when he simplified its production. He re-directed the production of After the Fall which came to this city in 1964, and he has directed the staging of his most recent hit, The Price, which opens recently at the Royal Alexandra.

Clear the Shelf

Are your bookshelves crowded to a point of unsightliness?

Are boxes of unwanted volumes cluttering your storage areas?

An annual event that can provide the answer and discover just the people who will make good use of those spare books, is now in preparation for its 1970 appearance.

It's the fifth consecutive secondhand book sale organized by the Women's Committee of Victoria Conservatory of Music.

This year it will take place March 6 and 7 at 613 Pandora Avenue, the Conservatory's old premises opposite Centennial Square.

Pre-sale work occupies most members of the committee for several weeks and consists of collecting books from donors, sorting, pricing and arranging.

★ ★ ★

Donations of books and also long play records (no 78's) and copies of such magazines as National Geographic, are now being sought.

Anyone who would like their donations picked up can make arrangements by phoning either 592-9709 or 383-4894. Or they can be left at the Conservatory office in Craigdarroch Castle any day of the week.

Profits from the sales, none of which has made less than $2,000, are used for scholarships to reward good students and assist those who need financial help.

But also benefitting on the four previous occasions have been school libraries, particularly those on severely restricted budgets which have been furnished with fresh and valuable material at a fraction of the normal cost.

ROZELLE'S BLIND DRAW . . . . . . ENDS 65-HOUR DEBATE

Grid Alignment Flowers in Vase

NEW YORK (AP) — Pro football's long-awaited realignment finally has been accomplished to the apparent satisfaction of all 26 clubs in the merged National and American leagues.

After 13 NFL owners in the National Conference had fumbled their way through almost 65 hours of debate in realignment sessions beginning late May, five plans submitted by commissioner Pete Rozelle were placed in a cut glass flower vase and a blind draw made by his secretary. The result was the following format.

East Division—Dallas, New York Giants, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Washington.

Central Division—Chicago, Detroit, Green Bay and Minnesota.

West Division—Atlanta, Los Angeles, New Orleans and San Francisco.

Then everyone went home happy, with the possible exception of the four Central Division bosses—linked together as they were last season in the National Football League but deprived of the warm-weather city all had sought as an addition to their line-up.

"There is some unhappiness, but I talked to the owners and they thought it was a fair shot and a satisfactory solution," said Rozelle, who prescribed the lottery and placed five possible alibnments in the grab bag after deciding the owners had exhausted all other efforts to reach agreement.

The 13-team American Conference, composed of the former AFL clubs plus Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Baltimore from the NFL, was set up last May after the Browns, Steelers and Colts agreed to make the switch.

Baltimore, Boston, Buffalo, Miami and New York Jets will play in the East Division beginning next season; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Houston and Pittsburgh in the Central Division, and Denver, Kansas City, Oakland and San Diego in the West.

The 14-game regular-season schedule will be retained.

Each team in a five-team division will meet the other clubs in its division on a home and-home basis, will play three of the other eight teams in the conference and will cross over for three games against clubs in the other conference.

In a four-team division, each club will meet the others in its division twice, home-and home; will take on five of the remaining eight teams in its conference and will play three inter-conference games.

Bill WALKER

Yesterday it was implied that, all remaining well, St. Louis Blues would waltz to another divisional title in the western sector of the National Hockey League. It also was suggested that it would be catch-as-catch-can for the other playoff berths with Oakland and Los Angeles the least likely to succeed.

This came about because of a half-season appraisal of NHL teams, the eastern section having been determined in the process. So be it.

Today an attempt will be made to explain some of the western whys, because at the season's beginning it was said that Oakland and Los Angeles had the necessary qualifications to be a more forceful threat to St. Louis than has been the case.

First, it should be noted that the Blues are again in a class by themselves in the west, and actually should be playing in the first division, the east. That would give the others a better chance of success. But even at that the Blues might find themselves in over their heads. Because their half-season record of 45 points in 38 games was only as good as the fourth-place team in the east, Detroit.

But this is a prime example of the class distinction that expansion has brought about. Three years later and the other five clubs in the west are on record as being no better than Toronto, the absolute worst in the east.

So what went wrong?

In Oakland, everything, it seems. But mainly it could be that the Seals went with more or less a stand-pat club from the one which suprisingly finished second last season and coach Fred Glover couldn't make believers out of his veterans again.

●

The Seals have tumbled a long way, and have been badly hurt in the goals—against department. Although ex-Victorian Gary Smith hasn't been blamed for the avalanche, he has hardly been spectacular either. Neither has Charlie Hodge. In addition, goal production is the league low, reason enough to find there isn't a Seal in the top 25 in the NHL scoring table.

Thus any chance of improvement is slight.

The same could be said for Los Angeles.

Hal Laycoe got his first chance to coach in the NHL this season, and he got with it with the Kings, which was most unfortunate. Because winning is the only name of the game that owner Jack Kent Cooke cares to recognize. So when the Kings turned belly-up early, Laycoe went upstairs. He said then he had a plan for the future, but it would take time. Perhaps it will, but right now time seems to have run out for L.A. even under new coach John Wilson. The Kings have the sorriest defensive mark in the league and would be last in goals scored, too, if it wasn't for Oakland.

Nothing has jelled and Eddie Shack never did find that track.

It isn't that the others are that all-conquering in their approach to the playoff positions. But they do appear to be more solid.

●

Pittsburgh, for example, is in fourth, where they figured to be. But here again, lack of a concerted attack is a needling problem. The Penguins aren't scoring enough goals to have a monopoly on that position. And their goaltending is no shucks. It was thought for a time that Al Smith, the ex-Victorian, might prove to be a good back-up man for Les Binkley. And although he still displays promise, a lack of grace has been showing in Smith's make-up. He has taken to late-game outbursts of temper, not always the mark of a winner. Still, there are such accomplished performers as Ken Schinkel, Bob Woytowich, Dean Prentice, Ron Schock and Jean Pronovost, who may have a revival. They will need it to keep their present rating safe.

The most improved team in the west has to be Minnesota. Last season they gave away more goals than anyone else. This season they aren't that pure in that department, but a definite upgrading has been noted, and is pointed up in their third-place standing after having been in second place most of the season.

The reason for the drop is simple. The Stars went winless from Dec. 10 until last Wednesday night. But then perhaps they were trying to impress their new coach Charlie Burns. Because actually since Burns assumed command (it was only tentative until this week) the Stars have lost only two of six, while winning one and tying three.

●

So perhaps they do have some staying power, one of their most glaring faults in earlier games.

And if the thought occurs that there may be an upset possibility somewhere in the boondocks, a likely prospect for further study is Philadelphia.

General manager Robert "Bud" Poile is gone (probably to Vancouver), but his toughies are living on and producing well under the direction of a just-as-tough taskmaster, coach Vic Stasiuk.

The Flyers have bulled their way into second place primarily because of a rugged defence that probably can match up to anything the east can muster.

Ed Van Impe, Joe Watson and the Hillmans are proven NHL players, and their record bears it out. The goalkeeping is in the capable hands of Bernie Parent, and although the attack bears the unmistakeable trademark of all western teams, weakness, there have been indications of better to come. Meanwhile, the defence makes up for that deficiency.

And if Philly can't win, they'll tie. Already they have 15, and when you tie, you can't lose. And they may not be losing too many in the late spring, either. Remember, you saw it here first.

So there you have it—the whys and the whynots at the halfway pole, or as the office wag said:

The only record Bobby Orr can't break this year is the one for most games played.

HEADING for California and qualifying attempt for Bing Crosby tournament at Pebble Beach next week is Victoria professional Bill Wakeham. Although Wakeham's tour card was suspended before Christmas, he is entitled to enter three U.S. tournaments without approved player certificate.

Cougars Given Obliging Result By Vancouver

Vancouver Centennials cosied up to Victoria, but that was the way Cougars and coach Doug Anderson wanted it. Centennials obliged, and now Cougars have a second hope.

Insofar as the second wish is concerned, Cougars will have to fend for themselves. The chance will be granted tonight at Memorial Arena when Victoria entertains Vernon Essos in a B.C. Junior Hockey League game.

Because of the games-in-hand advantage, Anderson "wanted" Vancouver to prevail over Vernon in Friday's meeting on the mainland. The Centennials did, 1-0, to consolidate their hold on second, two points behind Cougars, and three ahead of Vernon.

The games-played spread dictated Anderson's way of thinking Friday. Cougars have one in hand on Vancouver, concede four to Vernon. The Essos, five points behind the leaders, still pose the greatest threat to Cougars in the run for first, according to Anderson.

TRUDELL SOLD

Thus Anderson appreciated the roles played Friday by Lionel Trudell and Pat Russell of Vancouver. Trudell blanked the potent Esso scoring machine and Russell supplied the margin, a second-period power-play goal before a turnout of 1,012 fans.

There was more scoring in Penticton, where Kamloops Rockets took advantage of a lax Bronco defence to defeat the hometown club 7-4.

Ian Kinsman and Dave Mitchell both scored twice for Kamloops and singles were added by Roy Nystrom, Marv Ferg and John Senkpiel.

For Penticton, Bob Udell got two goals and the others came from Kerry Moss and Ron Boyle.

Cougars head into tonight's game against Vernon, starting at 8:30, without winger Lon Miles, still bothered by a shoulder injury. Miles' spot on a line with centre Rob Little and Shayne Webster will be taken by Pat Askew.

SHIBICKY ON WING

Victoria coach Doug Anderson will shuffle the makeup of his other lines. Alex Shibicky will move from centre to wing with centre Chris Riddell and either Don Blyth or John Kwasney. Ted Plowe will pivot between Bruce Cowick and Greg Robinson.

Anderson also has designated Ed Forslund to start in goal for a fourth straight game, thus indicating an end to the alternating system that has prevailed all season long.

Forslund, who has alternated with Geoff Ward, has been especially effective against the Vernon club.

League scoring statistics (including Friday's games):

	Pim	G	A	Pts
Wayne Dye, Vernon	59	27	31	58
Don Manson, Vernon	25	19	31	50
Larry Quechuk, Vernon	80	24	23	47
Bruce Cowick, Victoria	60	18	27	45
Marv Ferg, Kamloops	13	21	23	44

Flood Starts Court Battle

NEW YORK (AP)—Veteran outfielder Curt Flood Friday formally challenged baseball's reserve clause—an area that the game's brass considers vital to the sport.

His civil suit filed in federal court charged that baseball is a monopoly which places players in a state of peonage and involuntary servitude. A hearing is scheduled for Tuesday.

Specifically, Flood is protesting his trade from St. Louis Cardinals to Philadelphia Phillies. In a letter to baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn, Flood set the stage for his legal action by asking that he be declared a free agent and that the 24 major league teams be allowed to bid for his services.

Kuhn refused, pointing out in a letter to Flood that his assignment to the Phillies was within the terms of the standard player's contract.

That contract is based on an agreement between the owners and the Players Association which expired Dec. 31. Negotiations for a new agreement have been underway for some time and one of the areas the players are interested in adjusting is the reserve clause which binds a player to his team for life unless the team trades, sells or releases the athlete.

CHALLENGES CLAUSE

It is that clause that Flood is challenging.

Flood's suit contends that baseball is a monopoly operating in restraint of trade. "The baseball establishment maintains a lifetime grip on any player who wishes to play professional baseball in the United States," he adds.

The reserve clause has been tested twice before the courts and has been upheld on both occasions. In 1922, the Supreme Court, in an 8-0 ruling, found that baseball was not an interstate business and therefore not subject to anti-trust laws. That finding was upheld in 1952 when the high court refused by a 7-2 vote to overturn the earlier ruling.

Named as defendants by Flood in his suit were Commissioner Kuhn, Joe Cronin, president of the American League, and Chub Feney, president of the National League, as well as the 24 club owners.

Flood said he would not play baseball until the suit is settled.

Skrien Signed By Riders

REGINA (CP) — Head coach Eagle Keys of Saskatchewan Roughriders announced today signing of Dave Skrien as defensive coach, replacing Jim Spavidal, who signed recently with Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

Skrien's job will be the same as he had with Edmonton Eskimos last season.

Keys also announced that his other assistant coach, Ken McCullough, has signed for another Western Football Conference season.

Sayers Special

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gale Sayers of the Chicago Bears is just one of 64 National Football League stars who will see action Sunday in the 20th annual East-West game.

No one will deny, however, that Sayers is something special in the Pro Bowl, in the NFL and in other important areas.

Friday, in Santa Monica's Civic Auditorium, the gifted running back was honored by the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce as one of 10 of the nation's leading young men—not necessarily for his gridiron heroics but as a human being.

Sayers, the only back to run more than 1,000 yards in the 1969 season, devotes innumerable hours to youth work in Chicago's poor sections.

As for the Pro Bowl, which starts at 1 p.m. PST and will be nationally televised, Sayers' credentials are in order.

He was named Back of the Game in 1967 and 1968. In 1967 he set a Pro Bowl record by averaging 10 yards per carry in 11 runs. A knee injury and surgery sidelined him last year.

UNHAPPY GOLFER Friday was Dick Mayer, who grimaces as he misses putt on 10th green during second round of Phoenix Open tournament. This was only one of several sad moments for Mayer, who had fired a 66 in the first round. He skidded to a three-over-par 74 Friday for a 140 total, six strokes off pace set by Paul Harney. Casper's Rare Failing, But He Can Afford It

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Paul Harney fired a two-under-par 69 Friday and took over the second-round lead in the $100,000 Phoenix open golf tournament at 134.

Larry Ziegler, who scored his first tour victory in the Michigan Golf Classic late last year, bolted into contention at 135 with a sparkling 65, the best round of the day on the 6,765-yard, par-71 Phoenix Country Club course.

And Billy Casper, who became the game's second $1,000,000 winner when he captured the title in last week's Los Angeles Open, failed to make the cut for the final two rounds.

Casper, the pre-tournament favorite in this, the second stop of the year on the pro tour, had a 72 for 144, one stroke over the cut. It was only the second time in six years that Casper had failed to qualify for the final two rounds.

Also failing to make the cut was the veteran Stan Leonard of Vancouver. He shot 73 Friday for two-round total of 152.

Tied with Ziegler at 135 were defending champion Gene Littler and Howie Johnson, each with a second-round 68.

The group at 136 included Lee Trevino, 66, Rod Funseth and Phil Rodgers, each 67, Terry Dill, 68, Homero Blancas, 69, and Bert Greene, the first-round leader who slipped from a 64 to a 72.

Veteran Swiss Skier Takes Giant Slalom

KITZBUEHEL, Austria (AP, —Veteran skier Dlumeng Giovanoli, today won the World Cup giant slalom here, chalking up the first Swiss victory so far this season.

He sped through 57 gates on a wet, 1,700-metre track over a drop of 400 metres in one minute, 47.40 seconds, the fastest time of the run.

Giovanoli was also fastest on Friday.

His combined time was 3:20.67. Only the combined time from both runs counted for victory.

Andrzej Bachleda of Poland was second in 3:22.74 and Asu Austria's Karl Schranz was third in 3:22.88.

Patrick Russell of France remained the World Cup leader despite a fifth-place finish behind Swiss skier Edi Bruggmann.

MARIBOR, Yugoslavia (AP) — Anne-Marie Proell of Austria today won the giant slalom in the women's World Cup ski race. She was clocked in one minute 24.34 seconds on the difficult course on the Pohorje Mountain.

Florence Steurer of France was second with 1:24.49, followed by Barbara Cochran of the U.S. in 1:24.77.

Bernie Rauter of Austria was fourth in 1:24.85 and Ingrid Lafforgue of France fifth in 1:25.40.

The course had 55 gates over 1,400 metres and a drop of 430 metres.

Betsy Clifford of Ottawa was the top Canadian, finishing 23rd with a time of 1:27.85.

It was the first major victory for Miss Proell, 16, who was not among the favorites going into today's event.

Minor Hockey 'Nights' Slated

All of the three minor hockey associations in the Greater Victoria area have scheduled festivities in connection with Canada's annual Minor Hockey Week and one of them will jump the gun a little with its puck presentation.

Victoria youngsters will have their Minor Hockey Night in Memorial Arena, from 4:30 p.m. until almost midnight, next Thursday, two days before the official Jan. 24 start of the national "week."

Saanich has scheduled its night of festivities on Jan. 25 (4 to 11 p.m.) in Pearkes Arena while young players in the Esquimalt organization will demonstrate skills on Jan. 31 (4 to 11 p.m.) at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Minor Hockey Night provides youngsters in each organization with one of their few chances to perform before a large number of spectators and it also provides parents with an opportunity to see what is being accomplished by the minor puck groups.

The Canadian Amateur Hockey Association observes that, "although the recognition of the volunteer organizers, coaches, managers, car-drivers and fund-raisers is one of the most important objectives of Minor Hockey Week in Canada, it is not the only one.

"Another is to focus attention on minor hockey."

It is a time, the CAHA suggests, for each parent of a young hockey player to remember the slogan: "Don't send—TAKE your boy to the arena."

Late Fouls Hurt Uvic In Hoop Defeat at 'Peg

WINNIPEG—University of Victoria Vikings went gunning for a third-place tie here Friday night but wound up being forced to share their fourth-place berth in the Western Intercollegiate Athletic Association basketball league with University of Winnipeg Wesmen.

Playing the eighth game of their 16-game schedule, Wesmen took advantage of a rash of Victoria fouls in the closing stages to break away from a 72-72 deadlock and defeat the Vikings 86-76.

Vikings, who have now played seven games, and Wesmen head into tonight's action tied at eight points, two points behind the third-place University of Alberta.

It was a close struggle most of the way as Winnipeg snatched a slender 42-41 lead at half time and Victoria threatened through the second session until the late flurry of fouls.

BIRDS OUT IN FRONT

Ron Unruh and Barry King each fired 17 points to pace the Wesmen at attack while Brian Brumwell, with 13 points, and Corky Jossul and Mike Taaffe, each with 12, were the Viking scoring leaders.

First place was at stake in another game here Friday night and UBC Thunderbirds cracked a deadlock with University of Manitoba and jumped into the top berth by bouncing the Bisons 72-65.

In league action on other fronts, Regina Cougars upset Calgary Dinosaurs 98-74 and Saskatchewan Huskies clobbered Lethbridge Chinooks 100-53.

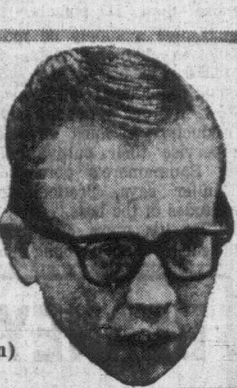
Curling Tips



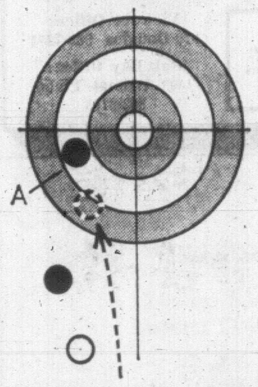
By Ron Northcott

(Three-time World Champion)

Playing in the middle to late ends of a game, Blacks have two choices, they can play an in-turn last rock. The second or third is throwing for blacks and he faces this house.

Blacks have to choices, they can play an in-turn draw to split the house, or an out-turn draw to "A" making certain not to be heavy.

THE STRATEGY: Taking the score into consideration, I would play the out turn draw to "A". If the shot is made reasonably well, you stand an excellent chance to score three. Your opponent almost certainly must try to follow your rock into the house. It is not possible to make a double and it is doubtful that even one rock will be killed. Even if your opponent elects to run off the guard, he will only have one chance to make the double and stop you from counting three.



You've got to go for ~~the~~ chance for a big end to get back into the game.

TODAY'S TIP: It is a must that sweepers stay with a rock until it reaches the house.

I have noticed many sweepers stop halfway or even three-quarters of the way down the sheet when both the skip and the shooter are shouting "don't sweep." To leave rocks such as this is a serious mistake.

Many times I have seen rocks such as these left and then suddenly immediate sweeping is required. Of course it is impossible if you've quit on the rock and the result is a missed shot.

Two significant things may develop if a rock is left: (1) the rock may pick up straws and dirt and stop quicker or curl more than expected. (2) An alternate shot may have been made if proper sweeping was applied.

Ward, Sturrock Pace Mixed Rinks

Rinks skipped by Ken Sturrock of Victoria Curling Club and Harvey Ward of Esquimalt won their first two games Friday to set the pace in the South Vancouver Island mixed playdowns at the Racquet Club.

Sturrock shaded clubmate Bud Taylor 8-6, then made it two straight by clipping Esquimalt's Harvey Thomson, 6-5.

Ward posted a pair of comfortable victories over two Racquet Club entries, defeating Fred Richardson 9-4 and Bob Siddall 13-4.

Glen Harper, who skipped a Duncan rink to the B.C. mixed championship a few years ago, won his first-round game. Harper had to "steal" a point on the last end to shade Sam Snobelen of the host club, 9-8.

Thirty-six rinks are entered in the double-knockout competition. Play resumed this morning and is scheduled to wind up Sunday.

Vancouver Sets Attendance Mark

By The Canadian Press

Vancouver Canucks continue to roll over their Western Hockey League opponents in relentless fashion.

A capacity crowd of 15,839 Canuck supporters turned out Friday night to watch their team roll to a 5-3 victory over second-place Portland Buckaroos.

Seattle Totems downed host Phoenix 2-1 in the only other game played.

The sellout crowd broke a WHL regular-season record of 13,752 set in San Diego in 1968.

Led by Len Lunde's three goals, the Canucks increased their league lead to 17 points over Portland and extended their current record to 20 wins, three ties and only one loss in their last 24 games.

Gerry Goyer and Doug Dunville added a goal apiece for Vancouver. Andy Hebenton, Larry Leach and Art Jones scored for Portland.

Blazing finish with 368-game carried Bill McKinnon to men's fivepin award in 12th week of annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week competition. Rolling in Monday Classic League at Gibson's Bowladrome, Bill topped male fivepinners in league play on southern Vancouver Island lanes as he added 368 effort to opening games of 288 and 280 for 936 series.

Hill Squad Wins Island Police Title

Victoria's Mo Hill keeps piling on the curling honors.

Skipping a combined RCMP-Esquimalt rink, Hill continued his winning ways by claiming the Vancouver Island police championship Friday at Victoria Curling Club.

Moving to the B.C. finals with Hill are Bill Erickson, Dave Wilson and Archie Browning.

Hill, Erickson, Wilson and Neil Dixon won the Robertston Stone—emblematic of the Victoria-area "Masters League" championship—and also claimed a berth in the Vancouver Island men's finals, all within the past month.

Ron Winn's Victoria RCMP quartet defeated Hill 7-6 in an extra end in Friday's "A" event final, but Hill rebounded to score an 8-5 victory in playoff to determine the Island championship.

Rams Improve Hold on Third By Easy Win

Mt. Douglas Rams strengthened their hold on third place Friday by rolling to an 85-32 Inter-High Senior Boys' Basketball League victory over Reynolds.

The win boosted Rams to within two points of Victoria High Totems.

Jim McKay (with 20 points), Brian Wright (18), Jim Hunter (15) and Russ Trace (14) carried the brunt of Rams' attack.

The league's undefeated leaders, Oak Bay clipped Templeton of Vancouver 60-50 in an exhibition game.

Holdover Walt Burrows rapped in 23 points for the Bays while Doug Walton added 20. Rick Waterman, with 20, was Templeton's high scorer.

Wesmen Trip Puck Vikings

Things were expected to be tougher at Esquimalt Sports Centre this afternoon when University of Victoria Vikings continued their quest for their first triumph in the Western Intercollegiate Athletic Association hockey league.

Viking hopes of cracking the losing skein flickered for a while Friday night on Esquimalt ice in a struggle with University of Winnipeg Wesmen.

The Victorians gave up two goals in the opening period but played strongly in the second session to start the final period trailing 2-0 and with a chance to trip the Winnipeggers.

Prospects brightened as the Vikings trimmed the deficit to 2-1, but then the Uvic defences cracked and collapsed in the closing 11 minutes and the Vikings went down to their sixth straight defeat as the Wesmen rolled to a 7-2 victory.

BISONS SHOW POWER

Chances of ending the skein in today's game appeared slim since the Vikings were going against the league-leading University of Manitoba Bisons, who displayed their power Friday night at Vancouver by thumping UBC Thunderbirds 9-1.

Ken Lee and Joe Fraser counted the first-period goals for Winnipeg and Lee fired two more tallies in the third period after goals by Peter Hughes and Dwight Folk had fanned Victoria hopes.

Wesmen lost the services of winger Craig Spencer at 13:21 of the opening period when he was handed a game misconduct after a tussle with Uvic's Paul Hanson, who received a double minor penalty. Spencer was tagged with a major penalty and under WCIAA rules any player incurring a major sentence for fighting automatically draws a game misconduct.

PINDER SCORED FIVE

Herb Pinder, former player with Canada's national team, scored five times at Vancouver as the Bisons trimmed the Thunderbirds, who hosted the Wesmen today. The clubs started in a fourth-place tie, UBC with three wins in six games and Winnipeg with three in seven.

In other games Friday, Calgary Dinosaurs defeated Brandon Bobcats 8-6 and Alberta Golden Bears tripped Saskatchewan Huskies 4-2.

Shvetz Sparks Butlers

Bill Shvetz never got around to the slap shot in 17 years as a professional hockey player.

The "wrist shot" is his thing, and the one-time Victoria Maple Leaf proved its effectiveness Friday in sparking Butler Brothers to a 6-4 Vancouver Island Hockey League victory of Queen's Own Rifles.

Playing his second game as a reinstated amateur, Shvetz scored two goals and set up a third as Butlers opened a four-point lead atop the league at the Esquimalt Sports Centre.

"Chevy's" second goal early in the third period broke a 3-3 tie and ignited a three-goal outburst that made it easy for Butlers.

Paul Bion, Mike McAvoy, Ron Marshall and Wayne Anderson scored Butlers' other goals while Dave Stones, Ivan MacPhee and Pete Okopski, with two, counted for Rifles.

National Hoop Squad Looking at Courtenay

COURTENAY — Only a minor detail remains to be arranged and the possibility of Courtenay becoming the site of the training camp for the national women's basketball team will almost certainly be assured.

Canadian Amateur Basketball Association vice president Norm Gloag, and Darlene Currie, one of the team coaches, flew to Courtenay Thursday for a whirlwind visit and later both expressed satisfaction with the facilities.

They were met by Mayor George Hobson. On the tour of facilities they were joined by Henry Schellinck, principal of G. P. Vanier high school; Doug Sankey, chairman of the Courtenay school board; W. C. Moore, Courtenay city administrator; Richard Wilson, president of Beaufort Association for Retarded Children, whose residence is being considered for sleeping and lounging use; Gus Vesterback, Comox commissioner for the Vancouver Island Basketball Association; Ruth McKellar, registrar, VIABA and also a school trustee; and Herb Bradley, superintendent parks and recreation, Courtenay.

THIS 100-year-old courthouse in Sherbrooke is among 16 buildings the Nova Scotia government plans to restore to original state in re-creating an old village.

Ancient Village Coming to Life

SHERBROOKE, N.S.—A village of the 1860s will come to life in the next few years in this picturesque community of 300 on Nova Scotia's eastern shore.

The provincial government plans to create the atmosphere and appearance of a century-old village in an ambitious 50-acre restoration program.

Work started in a small way with the shingling of the old Presbyterian church.

The government has budgeted $240,000 this fiscal year for preliminary work on the courthouse, the church, a jail, a school and 12 homes.

There are already many 100-year-old buildings here which need only minor exterior alterations to restore them to their original state.

Don Snow, government project co-ordinator, says alterations will include restoring old mouldings and window frames, replacing asphalt shingles with wooden ones, and removing modern additions such as aluminum doors and windows.

MUST BE REBUILT

Restoring interiors will be a much bigger and more expensive undertaking. The houses inside will have to be almost completely rebuilt to conform to the style of the 1860s, and furnishings of the period will have to be provided.

Families will continue to live in many of the homes with restored exteriors, while homes bought by the government and rebuilt inside will be opened to the public.

The restored properties will be landscaped and fenced as they were 100 years ago. Varieties of trees, flowers and shrubs that were non-existent in the region then will be torn up and replaced by plant life prevalent in the 1860s.

Wires will be placed underground, television aerials will come down, pavement will be removed to give an authentic flavor.

It is not the same as Ontario's Upper Canada Village, which was specially created by bringing in old homes displaced by the rising waters of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

"Sherbrooke is basically in its original condition, with most of the houses on the same sites as they were years ago."

The restored village will be part of a large project which the government hopes will draw tourists to the province's eastern shore.

The government controls 13 square miles in the vicinity, most of which is planned for use as parks and camp grounds and for such commercial developments as motels.

At its peak, Sherbrooke was a bustling village of 1,200, with shipbuilding, lumbering and flour mills. Today it serves mainly as a market centre for farmers of the St. Mary's River valley and as the seat of St. Mary's municipality.

Situated as it is on the main eastern shore highway between Halifax and Antigonish, it could become an attraction for tourists and bolster the development of the whole scenic region.

French Restaurant Tradition Dying

By JOHN VINOCUR

LES-BAUX-DE-PROVENCE — The best French restaurants are threatened because it's harder and harder to find the right ingredients, the right people to cook them, and then the right people to serve them.

That prognosis for gastronomy in France comes from a man who knows his business: Raymond Thuilier, owner of La Baumaniere, one of the country's best places to eat.

Thuilier, 73, comes to work in a metallic grey Lancia coupe and then puts on a white cook's apron and jacket for a day of checking sauces, phoning orders to pultry merphoning orders to poultry merchants or complaining about the quality of the last batch of cheese he received.

●

His restaurant has three black stars in the Michelin Guide for its cooking, and five symbolic red knives and forks because of its magnificent setting: a stark valley behind the limestone cliffs where kings of Provence brought a renaissance to the south of France centuries ago.

"I started the restaurant after the Second World War," Thuilier said. "It was a time when there was nothing. When you gave a little, people thought it was a lot. By 1954 I had my three stars."

●

The job is harder in a time of plenty than during one of scarcity 25 years ago.

"The situation is this: I get my chicken from Bresse, a region near Lyons. I have a man there who supplies me. But if all of a sudden I wanted 50 for a banquet or something I couldn't get them. The quality runs too thin. It doesn't pay any more."

La Baumaniere's specialty is saddle of lamb cooked with green pepper kernels. To get the right tenderness Thuilier wants lambs that weigh no more than 11 pounds. To guarantee a supply he must buy in 12-month lots, at $80,000 a year. "Before, you could order what you needed. Now, in order to get the right products, you must virtually supervise their cultivation."

La Baumaniere's personnel, Thuilier says, "reflect the attitudes of the boss."

"But it's more and more difficult to find a young man who agrees to having no fixed hours. If someone comes here at 3:30 in the afternoon and wants a meal, we serve him. No one protests. I don't like the cafe waiter style."

Thuilier cannot easily visualize someone setting up a great, new restaurant.

"The tradition is going to die," he says. "A place like ours is a memory of the past. We believe in good eating and courtesy and imparting a sense of well-being. That isn't very modern, is it."

13th Volume For City Poet

University of Victoria poet Robin Skelton has just published his 13th book of poems, "Answers," in London, England.

Professor Skelton, who heads the Uvic creative writing division, is on sabbatical leave, spending several months at Majorca, Spain.

Now in London, he has also completed the text of a new book, "The Practice of Poetry", which will be published later this year.

Dollars for Bermuda

HAMILTON, Bermuda — The people of Bermuda, for years ardent wooers of Canadian and American tourist dollars, will get a dollar of their own next month.

They'll have cents, too, as they foresake the pounds and pence that now remind visitors of this colony's ties to Britain.

Decimal Day, or Dollar Day if you prefer, is Friday, Feb. 6, when the changeover is official.

Bermuda is four years behind the Bahamas and Australia in changing its system to dollars and a year ahead of Britain in changing to the decimal system. But Britain, while going to decimals, will retain pounds-pence terms instead of adopting dollars and cents.

Bermuda's new coins are the same size and weight as Canadian cents, dimes, nickels and quarters. And the value is the same, but the resemblance stops there.

An angel fish decorates one side of the five-cent piece. The dime sports Easter lilies, the quarter a longtail bird in flight and the cent a wild hog or boar.

The hog is copied from the islands' first currency, minted early in the 17th century. It became known as the hog-penny.

The paper money will be in different colors to make it easy to spot values, as in Canada.

Bermuda's $1 bill will be predominantly blue. Maroon red is for $5 and green for $20. The paper money will show such local motifs as St. David's Lighthouse.

QUEEN ON COINS

Queen Elizabeth's head appears on the obverse of both coins and bills.

Postal stamps of 17 denominations, pegged to the new decimal standards, will be issued in June. They will depict Bermuda's flowers.

Authorities decided to go decimal a year ahead of Britain because, for one thing, they anticipated few change-over difficulties in a place where Canadian and American dollars have circulated freely.

Also, they wanted to get Bermuda's order for new coins to the Royal Mint early, before those of more Commonwealth countries which plan to change over.

In another departure from Britain's methods, Bermudians are putting their money on a parity with U.S. currency.

At the start, at least, one Bermuda cent equals one American cent. Britain's decimal coins will be based on one pound divided into 100 pence instead of a dollar divided into 100 cents.

The colony's new currency will not be on its own, however. It still will be pegged to sterling, so any revaluation of the British pound could mean changes in value here, too.

Despite the familiarity with dollars and cents on the tourist level, the conversion still means headaches for many of Bermuda's 50,000 inhabitants. To make things easier, some stores plan to adopt a two-price system with tags showing the old price and a translation into the dollar.

Windsor Castle

In a Bowler on Beer Barrel He Told His Funereal Tale

By NORMAN CRIBBENS

The great grey castle at Windsor, rising steeply from the gentle embrace of the silvery Thames, has been the home of British royalty for more than 1,000 years.

It was built by William the Conqueror as a fortress in 1068 —two years after his much-publicized invasion of England —and redesigned nearly 300 years later by King Edward III.

It was here, in the Round Tower, that King Edward founded the noble Order of the Garter, Britain's premier award of chivalry and one of its most cherished traditions.

He built St. George's Hall (now St. George's Chapel) as a banqueting place for the Garter Knights, and the banners of the original 25 still hang from its venerable walls.

The Throne Room, where so many Knights of the Garter were invested, is laid with a splendid carpet of blue—royal blue and one of the largest ever made in one piece.

When the court isn't sitting, the 18 state rooms at the castle are open to public inspection, and they are filled with treasures that excite, not only connoisseurs, but the millions of tourists who flock to Windsor every year.

Knock Thrice, Ask for Snowy

Returning there recently after an absence of 17 years was a magical experience. I hadn't seen Windsor since 1952 when, with hundreds of British and overseas correspondents, I reported the funeral of King George the Sixth for The Canadian Press service.

He was buried in the royal vault below St. George's Chapel and, the day before the ceremonies, I went down from London to hire a phone to be used in dictating an eye-witness report immediately the service was over.

Reporters galore were competing for these precious outlets and a great many had already been booked. Piquantly, although the only church phone in the vicinity had been pledged to a London newspaper in exchange for a handsome donation to funds, the landlady of a low-cellinged tavern near St. George's Chapel wouldn't take any money at all.

In words that are graven on memory she said:

"We don't make money out of funerals, ducks; certainly not King George's, good man that he woz. If you need a phone to do yor job, there's one in the beer cellars you might use, if you'll promise to reverse the charges.

"Just go down to the basement door, knock three times and ask for Snowy!"

I did just that. Minutes after the good king had been laid to rest, I hurried round to the ancient tavern and down the worn, grey steps to the cellar door; knocked slowly three times and, lo and behold, a small white head peered into view.

"Snowy?"

Ashes to Ashes, Dust to Dust

"Yus—an' I guess you be the gennelman from the Press wot wants ter use th' phone."

He took me down into the cellars, reeking of hops, and pointed to a wall phone perched about two feet above the line of barrels.

So picture, if you will, a man in a bowler hat, black overcoat and black tie, seated on a beer barrel with his prayer book open at the funeral service on a second barrel, dictating reams of religious ceremonial with liberal quotes from the prayer book.

Snowy stood by in astonishment as I dictated:

"Then, said the Archbishop, in awesome tones, colon quote Man that is born of woman hath but a short time to live . . . ashes to ashes and dust to dust."

Blimey, Here's Blinkin' Padre

I sat on my barrel for some 45 minutes, hemming, hawing and hesitating and struggling with every word I could muster to put the majesty and drama of that stately service on paper (at the other end of the line).

Then, feeling somewhat like a limp rag, I crept up the cellar stairs and into the saloon bar of that old-world hostelry.

It had opened immediately after the funeral and was now crowded with burly guardsmen—the British, Welsh and Grenadier Guards—who had been standing sentinel along the cold, windswept route of the procession and were now thawing out in the approved military style.

Somewhat tense after the effort of dictating a long descriptive story, under somewhat ludicrous circumstances, I climbed into that fuggy bar, still clutching my prayer book and still wearing the funeral black coat and bowler.

A Cockney guardsman looked up (or rather down) from the bar counter as this strange figure emerged from the cellars and exclaimed:

"Blimey, if it ain't th' blinkin' padre! Bit late arncher Mate?"

No Visas For Bulgaria

Visitors to Bulgaria won't need visas in 1971.

The government has just re-enacted the ruling first put into effect in 1968 that visitors who spend a mimimum of 48 hours in the country are not required to obtain visas. The maximum non-visa period is two months, longer than most holidayers would stay.

Grigor Giurov, director of the Bulgarian Tourist Office in Montreal, said the regulation would be in effect at least through 1971.

German Alps

Eleven communities in the Berchtesgaden area in Germany's Alps offer low-price inclusive terms for a stay including lessons in ballroom dancing, swimming, horseback-riding, shooting, mountain-climbing, coasting, skiing and ski bob riding.

Prospective visitors may apply for a brochure with dates of hobby holidays to Kurdirektion Berchtesgaden, Postfach 240, 824 Berchtesgaden, West Germany.

MAIDEN ASIA VOYAGE

Matson Lines' 26,000-ton flagship SS Lurline will make her maiden voyage to Japan and the Orient this spring.

The cruise has been specially timed to coincide with Expo '70 and Japan's Cherry Blossom Festival

The big white ship, which has been called the "Hotel SS Lurline" because of her role as a luxury floating resort, will leave Los Angeles March 27 and San Francisco March 29 for Honolulu, and then proceed to the Far East. Ports of call will be Yokohama-Tokyo, Kobe-Osaka, Keelung-Taipei, Hong Kong, Manila, Guam and Honolulu and back, and ample time will be spent in each port for passengers to see the sights.

CAPITAL CITY TRAVEL TOURS
SPECIAL NOTICE
We wish to announce that we have just completed another successful year of over forty tours in 1969.
Our Pasadena Turnament of Roses Tour was our last for the year. Mr. William A. Heller, President of Capital City Travel Tours, has operated and organized packaged chartered bus tours from Victoria to many parts of the western United States, British Columbia and Alaska since 1950 and has been in transportation services since 1929. Mr. and Mrs. William Heller started their own business under the name of Capital City Travel Tours in 1962 with only 19 members and can now boast of over 3,000 congenial and happy members in B.C. and western United States.
Owing to the tremendous popularity of Chartered Bus Packaged Tours, Super Highways, Freeways, New and Fast Ferry Systems plus the ever increasing improvements of De Luxe Scenic Air Conditioned and Rest Roomed Highway Buses.
We can boast of accident-free tours over these years because we use buses built for short or long distant Highway traffic, with drivers who have had many years of heavy equipment driving.
For many years we used C & C Transportation Company Buses, in 1968 Vancouver Island Coach Lines Limited purchased these, we have been using Coach Lines buses on all our tours and shall continue to do likewise. These are equipped and maintained for all year services. It takes many months of organizing, making reservations for only excellent hotels, motels, ferries and entertainment, etc. This eliminates any inconvenience to our patrons whatsoever.
At all times whether it be a day tour or a long tour we have an experienced tour director for commentaries, etc.
We have always believed in a fair price and will remain to do so in the future. We shall continue living up to the high standards of our tours.
We do not lower these standards by using low cost buses, cheaper motels, hotels, etc.
We wish to thank our many patrons over the years for making our business a success and looking forward to having you along on any of our future tours.
Wishing you the best in 1970, we remain, Doris and Bill Heller.

WEEKEND'S TOP TV SHOWS

Tonight

MOVIE TO WATCH this evening is Shane, a powerful Western drama on Channel 12 at 9. Alan Ladd, Jean Arthur and Van Heflin star in this 1953 production, which almost ranks as a classic.

MUSIC HALL. 7, Channel 8. The Friars Roast Jack Benny, Johnny Carson is Roastmaster, and he gets able assists from George Burns, Ed Sullivan, Alan King, Milton Berle, Phil Harris and Dennis Day. Also in the act is U.S. Vice-President Spiro Agnew, with Washington's unofficial views on Benny's fiscal policies and political inclinations.

WIDE WORLD OF SPORTS. 4:30, Channel 8; 5, Channel 4. Anyone interested in football, ski jumpin and wrist-wrestling, of all things, can tune in here for the lot. Joe Namath and Howard Cosell will be reporting the action of the Super Bowl highlights on view; Oberstdorf, Germany is the setting for a segment on the International Ski Jumping Championship; and Petaluma, California, is the city where the World Wristwrestling Championship takes place.

JACKIE GLEASON. 7:30, Channel 7, 12. Amusing nonsense fills Jackie's variety show tonight. First, there's George Burns chattering away about Jack Benny in one spot, and merrily singing and yarn-spinning about a party at Edward G. Robinson's in another. Comedienne Lisa Miller is wacky enough to entertain George and Jackie; Morey Amsterdam comes on for a comedy routine; ventriloquist Aaron Williams performs; and last but not least, Art Carney has a ball playing Ed Norton in a sewer skit without benefit of pal Ralph Kramden.

ANDY WILLIAMS. 7:30, Channel 5. Andy likes to mix up the standard guest list, so tonight he books Kate Smith and counters with Hawaii's Don Ho. Jolly Kate does her version of "The Party's Over" and she's a sucker for the cookie hungry bear. Don Ho keeps on singing about those "Tiny Bubbles" with Andy, leaving it up to The Rascals to come up with such rock numbers as "People Gotta Be Free." The Osmond Brothers appear in a country waltz, and our golfing host dips into the past for "This Nearly Was Mine."

SATURDAY NIGHT AT THE MOVIES. 9, Channel 5. "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum." (1966). The mad, bawdy, Broadway musical set in Ancient Rome with Zero Mostel playing a sly and eager-to-be-free slave, is transferred to the screen with zest and style. It's burlesque at its best, and director Richard Lester keeps the cast working at a break-neck pace for laughs. The musical numbers are fun, but many have been deleted from the original score by Stephen Sondheim. It's a joy to see Messrs. Mostel, Phil Silvers and Jack Gilford romping through this farce.

HOLLYWOOD PALACE. 9:30, Channel 4. Country artists pour it on as Bobbie Gentry, "Hee Haw's" Roy Clark, and John Hartford co-host the variety bill. The trio concentrate on a version of "Shady Grove," and Frankie Laine moves in for a medley including "Brother Loves Travelling Salvation Show." Each host has time for a solo, with Miss Gentry leading "Raindrops Are Falling On My Head." Louie Nye gets into the act with "Toot Toot Tootsie Goodbye," and a group called the Brooklyn Bridge makes its debut.

MANNIX. 10, Channel 7. Here's a whoodunit loaded with TV faces of the 50's — Scott Brady, Dewey Martin, and Ted De Corsia, to name a few. Mannix fights the police and the world proving the innocence of his client accused of shooting a druggist. To increase the odds, it turns out the druggist was a phoney. Since nobody's going t figure out this plot, our advice is to sit back and enjoy the old-timers, still in there pitching.

Sunday

MOVIE TO WATCH this evening is on Channel 6 at 11:20 — The Three Faces of Eve. Joanne Woodward won an Oscar for her performance in this dramatization of a case history in which a Georgia housewife had three diffrent personalities.

TOMMY HUNTER. 7, Channels 2 and 6. An hour-long special this week, it's highlights of Tommy's annual trip to visit Canadian servicemen in Cyprus.

DRAMA SPECIAL. 9, Channels 2 and 6. Black Phoenix is an illustration of depraved hate and violence. A group of self-styled Nazis begin a terror regime and a local storekeeper, a survivor of a German concentration camp, attempts to take matters into his own hands.

ED SULLIVAN. 8, Ch. 7, 12—A varied guest list tonight ranges all over the lot from Muhammad Ali (Cassius Clay), to country singer Minnie Pearl, with Jose Jimenez (Bill Dana), singer Buddy Greco, the song-and-dance Kessler Sisters, plus actress June Allison, in between.

GLEN CAMPBELL GOODTIME HOUR, 7:30, ch. 8, 9, ch. 7—Thanks to Peggy Lee, Wally Cox, and songwriter Neil Diamond, this is one of the better efforts of the series. Peggy sets the tone with a version of the Beatles' "Something," and then duets with Glen to "I'm Leaving on a Jet Plane," returning for a big finale with Campbell and Neil Diamond for songs like "Dock of the Bay" and "Spinning Wheel." Wally Cox whistles and yodels, and since they're cycle riders, Cox and Glen Campbell show excerpts from a wild film called "Vicious Cycles." Campbell also gives some time tc the team of Patchet and Tarses playing prospective fathers in a hospital waiting room.

BONANZA, 9, ch. 5—"The Big Jackpot." A fun episode. An Indian he befriended, dies, and leaves Candy his entire estate, and so from out of the blue, Candy becomes a sought-after millionaire. The holdings are sold to a land development company, and Candy leaves the Ponderosa planning to live the big life. Since his contract with the series hasn't expired, you can almost guess the rest, but it's entertaining while it lasts.

SUNDAY NIGHT MOVIE, 9, ch. 4—"Woman Times Seven." (1967). Shirley MacLaine has a role actresses dream about in this uneven film. She plays seven different roles with seven different leading men (Michael Caine, Peter Sellers, Alan Arkin, Rossano Brazzi, Vittorio Gassman, Clinton Greyn, and Lex Barker), in as many episodes. Miss MacLaine is at her best playing an ordinary wife who reverts to hysteria in order to capture her novelist-husband's (Lex Barker) attention.

THE FORSYTE SAGA. 8, Ch. 9—"A Family Wedding." The atmosphere of this hour is fascinating but extremely different from the Saga up to this point. Fleur is definitely the centre of the action and emotion, and now that her life has taken a direction other than the one she had planned, the people surrounding her, except for Soames, of course, are mostly newcomers to the scene. The best aspect of this episode is its commentary on the politics, economics, and social customs of the 1920's, interwoven with admirable skill into the relationships of such characters as publisher Michael Mont (Nicholas Pennell) and the people in his office, and Michael's father and Soames. (Black and White).

MISSION: IMPOSSIBLE. 10, ch. 7, 12—Rousing finale to the colorful three-part palace intrigue. All is going smoothly after an extensive recap—Barney is sliding down elevator shafts to drill through walls and reach Phelps with the imprisoned prince, when an unforeseen bomb blast creates a foul-up of major proportions. For once, the agents appear to be licked as Paris and Tracy are caught red-handed. The windup is quite satisfactory when the military leaders doublecross each other, and the prize falcon comes to the rescue.

Wiretaps Link Actor Raft With Cosa Nostra Suspect

NEW YORK (AP)—Hollywood actor George Raft has been depicted in telephone wiretaps as a go-between for an alleged $21,300 cheque transmittal to a reputed Cosa Nostra lieutenant.

In tapes played Friday at a New Nork state joint legislative committee hearing on crime, Raft, 74, was mentioned as the intended first recipient of the cheque from multi-millionaire Kirk Kerkorian to alleged mobster Charles (Charley the Blade) Tourine.

The cheque was to have been cashed by Raft, according to the tapes, for Tourine, who refused to answer committee questions about the tapes. The tapes were said to have been made in 1961.

Kerkorian, 52, is a Las Vegas hotelman and financier who recently gained control of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc.

No reason was given for the transaction discussed in the tapes.

Mary Poppins Shows Through Newest Comedy

By CHARLES WITBECK

HOLLYWOOD — Chronologically speaking, first comes John Mills, the much worked English actor, followed by daughter Hayley, Walt Disney's deb a few years back, and now daughter Juliet Mills takes a turn, playing a Mary Poppins character in "The Nanny and the Professor," ABC's new half-hour comedy airing Wednesday on Channel 4 at 7:30.

Juliet's nanny works her charms on American professor Richard Long, three children and the standard sheep dog without benefit of wings or umbrellas, but the lady has to be a definite steal from Julie Andrews' famous Mary. The Disney people can't say anything, yet nanny has all those cute, cuddly studio characteristics, and it must hurt to see her under another trademark.

JULIET MILLS . . . promising start

In the pilot, nanny comes out of the blue, arriving at the professor's front door before he puts a want ad for a governess in the Times. The sweet little thing is psychic. She talks to animals, is not sure if they understand, and she sees things others miss.

Juliet's character lacks Liz Montgomery's magical tricks; she is not in love with a ghost like Hope Lange, but she falls somewhere in the middle, a kissing cousin to the network's crew of ladies with extrasensory powers manufactured to amuse the kiddies. Having found a good thing, ABC wants to beat it to death with similar entries, so nanny, no doubt will be roasted by the critics, but not Juliet.

Miss Mills disarms by merely smiling, and her father's charm and manner of commanding attention have been inherited. Listening to the actress talk, it is hard to visualize her as an authoritative governess. Real nannies don't look like Juliet. If they did everyone would have them.

Producer Dave Gerber, who managed to sell the network "The Ghost and Mrs. Muir" after it had been dropped by NBC, went to London searching for the right nanny after scanning the Hollywood product. Supposedly he tested 150 girls, among them Juliet.

Considering herself a happy poverty-stricken theatre actress, Juliet was in the midst of a lengthy run in "She Stoops To Conquer," and she answered the Gerber call with few expectations.

Later, in August, Gerber bought her out of the play to make her pilot, then wired his star in October to fly over and begin shooting for a January debut.

"I was stunned and didn't know what to do, so I went to father for advice," Juliet said on becoming the selectee, "I remember how hard he worked in a television western, "Dundee and the Culhane,' and that it came off badly."

Regardless of his defeat, Mills advised her to accept, calling it a "wonderful opportunity" to reach a different audience.

Besides, the film business seemed rocky, "all his friends were out of work," so a TV series and the chance of unexpected money couldn't be wasted.

Juliet, her young son, Sean, and nanny arrived in the fall, and using psychic powers, managed to rent a Cheviot Hills home right next door to the house used by the studio for exteriors. "positive thinking" Juliet calls it, "a little nanny magic," inherited from her Irish mother who is always a step ahead.

This may explain why the youngster dreamed of becoming a Margot Fonteyn, enrolling in a ballet boarding school at 9, concentrating on nothing else until 16, when she realized greatnesss was not in her legs.

"I have friends who've spent 15 years in the chorus," the actress admitted. "That's where I would be today, so I began seeing myself as Juliet."

The transfer worked before she managed to enroll in the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts. She landed a part in "Five Finger Exercise," took direction from Sir John Guilgud, and spent 18 months in the London run and 9 months on Broadway. Since that move Juliet has worked steadily, sneaking off for a spot of sun in sister Hayley's French villa.

Do you think there's more to life for you and your children than drugs, pop stars, mini skirts and sex?

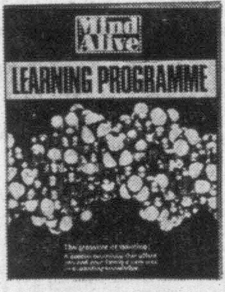
THEN MIND ALIVE—THE FIRST-EVER PROGRAMMED ENCYCLOPEDIA HAS BEEN WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN.

WEEK BY WEEK, MIND ALIVE WILL HELP YOU GET MORE OUT OF LIFE; HELP YOU TO KNOW MORE AND GO FURTHER.

WHAT IS MIND ALIVE?

It is an absolutely new Encyclopedia which will be issued in weekly parts for 120 weeks, and will build week by week into a complete Encyclopedia of a new kind. There will be eight great volumes. Binders will be available for every fifteen issues to give you a beautiful set of bound volumes for your home.

FREE LEARNING PROGRAMS



Week by week as you read Mind Alive, the Learning Programs show you what you have learned, check what you remember and help you to retain once and for all what you might otherwise have forgotten.

The Learning Programmes not only help you to learn — they also relate what you are learning to your everyday life. Based on teaching methods devised and perfected here and in the United States, they make learning easy and enjoyable. No other Encyclopedia in the world has this most modern of all learning techniques.

GOOD READING STARTS WITH THE FIRST 32-PAGE PART. HERE IS THE LIST OF ARTICLES IN VOLUME 1, PART 1:

1. Fate and the human egg.
2. Man, the worshipping animal.
3. When the earth stood still.
4. The Painter and the Nude.
5. The atom that isn't.
6. Where does life begin?
7. Freedom in the golden age of Athens.

PLUS first free Learning Program. Even if Mind Alive did not build week by week into a great eight-volume Encyclopedia, you can see what compelling, interesting reading it gives you.

SEVEN THOUSAND ILLUSTRATIONS, MOST OF THEM IN COLOUR!

Every 32-page issue of Mind Alive contains about 60 illustrations, photographs, Maps and diagrams — most of them in colour, and many so new they have never been seen before in any publication in the world. Each illustration has been chosen to make the text clearer and to act as an aid to understanding and memory. Your eight volumes will contain 7,000 fascinating pictures.

SEVEN KEY SUBJECTS EACH WEEK.

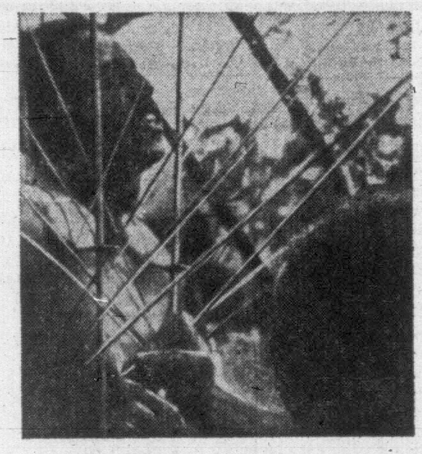
In order to plan significantly such a vast store of knowledge, to give it living, lasting shape and meaning, Marshall Cavendish, the publishers, have devised the method of Seven Key Subjects. Each week, you will read articles under each of these seven subject headings:

Man and Medicine; History; Physical Science; Ideas; Biology; The Arts; Geography.

Each week, under these headings, Mind Alive will bring you living, priceless knowledge and help you to retain and make use of it in every aspect of your life. Each article you read will dovetail with those which precede and follow it in other weekly parts. The whole emphasis, throughout, will be on explanation as well as information. All the family, from mid-school years onwards, will be able to enjoy and assimilate this great store of knowledge.

"SEARCH FOR ECSTASY" IDEAS:

This Hindu youth feels no pain and sheds no blood, though steel needles are threaded through his flesh. In certain ways his trance-like ecstasy is akin to that experienced by the young flower people at a hippie happening.



COURSES ON SPEED-READING, MEMORY TRAINING, HOW TO STUDY.

Every single part of Mind Alive after the first one, gives you a special learning course, quite apart from your free Learning Programe. Articles on speed-reading, clearer thinking, concentration, memory training, how to study, how to prepare for examinations, and many other learning techniques will be of lasting value to you and your children.

EASY-REFERENCE INDEX.

The special cross-referenced index will give you years of useful reference for work, games and studies. Look up your subject under one heading and you will receive references to every mention given in the 2 million words of text!

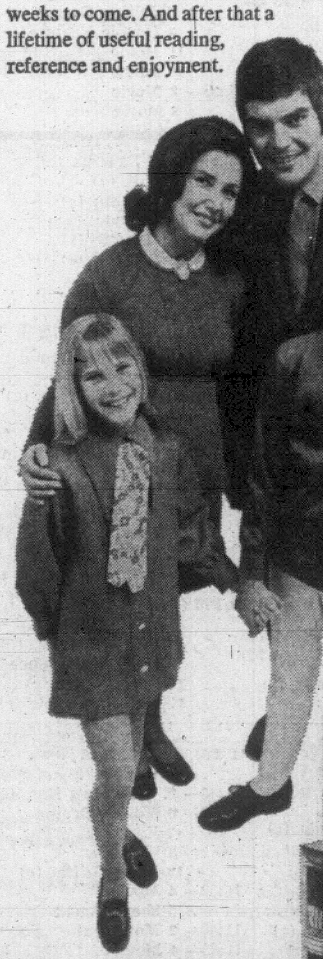
Bathers by Cezanne

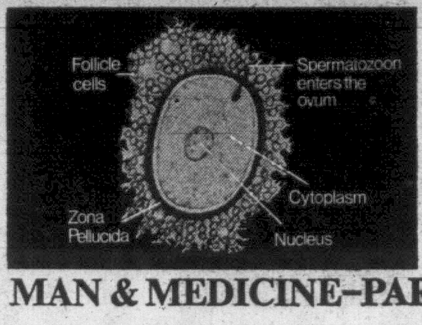
THE ARTS—PART 1

"The Painter and the Nude"
Whether at the wall of a tomb, on scaffolding high against a chapel ceiling, or before canvas in a studio, the fine arts painter has always responded to his greatest challenge — the human body.

READ ABOUT THINGS THAT MATTER!

If you believe, like the publishers of Mind Alive, that knowledge of the great and lasting truths of the world matters more than the superficial and the sensational — then you and your family have 120 very happy, busy weeks to come. And after that a lifetime of useful reading, reference and enjoyment.





MAN & MEDICINE—PART 1

"Fate and the Human Egg"
Where the largest and the smallest of human cells meet and fuse, the biological miracle of conception occurs.

What is its significance? The article deals with why twins are sometimes born, whether it will be a boy or girl — is there an even chance.

WHAT WILL IT COST YOU?

Mind Alive will be issued at 75¢ a week. This will include the free Learning Program with the first weekly part, and a new free Learning Program every five weeks.

You buy the complete Encyclopedia weekly for a few cents more than the price of a large packet of cigarettes — 120 parts, eight binders, index and twenty-four free Learning Programs.

WITH EACH WEEKLY PART, YOU SAVE MONEY.

Most other encyclopedia publishers print sets of volumes; get them bound; store them, and then sell them. Their production costs are high and their methods of selling, too, through salesmen, is expensive — with commissions, hire-purchase and credit charges. All these costs have to be passed to you.

By our method, you can have the same high quality, the same standards of scholarship and research for as little as a third of the price — so you save, as you read, each week. We print hundreds of thousands of copies weekly, which considerably lowers the price of printing.

For the weekly price of a good magazine you have a beautiful well-bound eight-volume colour Encyclopedia you can all be proud of — a living, everlastingly useful treasure for your home. And you didn't notice paying for it!

British Troubleshooter Leaves Unique Post

By ALAN HARVEY

LONDON (Reuters) — Britain's ad hoc ambassador to almost anywhere has quit his troubleshooting beat to concentrate on books and birdwatching.

At 68, Malcolm MacDonald has recently ended a unique assignment tailored to his special talents—acting as Britain's one-man troubleshooter in Africa and Asia.

"The post was especially created, and there will be no replacement," said an official of the foreign and Commonwealth office which gave the suntanned, zestful Scotsman half the world as his stamping grounds.

Jetting in from London to help out British diplomats—discreetly, of course—MacDonald helped avert fighting in Laos, reassured Africans about British intentions in Rhodesia and smoothed the inglorious imperial retreat east of Suez.

He did it by being color blind. He became, in his own words, "an Afro-Asian with a bit o' Scots blood," ignoring differences of pigmentation and displaying an undergraduate enthusiasm for local customs and activities.

A diplomat who worked with him when he was high commissioner to India in 1955-1960 said: "There is no trace of snobbery or race prejudice in his make-up. He never stands on his dignity—and people immediately warm to him."

Another colleague recalled memories of the high commissioner in a bush shirt at Indian parties "squeezing and sucking mangoes with the best."

As a footloose envoy, he clocked several million airline miles, travelling so frequently that one secretary was employed fulltime to look after his flight log.

As British commissioner to Canada from 1941 to 1946, MacDonald achieved a record for transatlantic flights by a civilian, crossing the ocean 28 times in elderly bombers with uncomfortable metal seats.

As Kenya's governor-general, he won such acclaim that the government asked him to stay on as high commissioner in 1964 and offered him a home in perpetuity.

Breezy in relationships but tactful in diplomacy, he once walked through a Singapore street on his hands. Before topless fashions emerged, he earned editorial censure by posing for pictures with a Dyak chief's wives, who wore nothing from the waist up.

His father was Ramsay MacDonald, a British prime minister. He used to claim two fathers, the other being a Borneo chieftain who adopted him as a son.

Hudson's Bay Company
INCORPORATED 2ND MAY 1670

1670

See the 300th Anniversary Exhibit now on display on the Bay's 4th floor

Designed with brilliant visual effects, the exhibit traces the activities of the Company over the past three centuries. From Radisson and Des Groseilliers to the present day. Dramatically mounted in a contemporary style, it presents all manner of archive material. It is an exciting view of one of the world's oldest companies. Be sure to see it now as the Hudson's Bay Company begins an age of new adventure. This historical exhibit is on display on the fourth floor of the Hudson's Bay Store in Victoria until February 14th.

42 RED-FACED ON PINK SLIPS

City traffic police today warned motorists to carry their insurance cards (pink slips) with them.

Forty-two drivers failed to produce their insurance cards at roadclocks on Bay Street and Gorge Road Friday.

Warning tickets were issued, but charges may be laid next time.

To simplyfy matters, Sgt. Albert Harwood suggested that drivers keep their licence, registration and insurance cards in one pocket book.

★ ★ ★

The roadblocks resulted in four drivers being charged with having no insurance. No drinking drivers were spotted.

A total of 70 other charges were laid for offences, such as no motor vehicle stickers, failing to change address, no driver's licence, violation of licence restriction and no chauffeur's licence.

Twenty-one warning tickets were issued to motorists who failed to produce the driver's licences, five to produce inspection stickers, and seven to produce registration slips.

'I COULD DIE IN HERE'

Flu Bug Wins the Battle of Room 115

By DON VIPOND

You could say that a tiny flu bug tackled the federal government's austerity program in Victoria last week—and won.

Scene of the battle was Room 115 of Canada Customs House, 816 Government, where Ottawa opened a citizenship office last spring.

●

For part of two days and all of a third that office was shut tight during regular hours and on the locked door a notice proclaimed:

"This office is closed until further notice due to illness."

The federal government shut down by sickness? Unheard of!

There were grumbles from the people who came to do business and couldn't. And rumbles from other staff in the building unable to refer people to the citizenship office.

But the most pungent comments came from Mrs. Laura Affleck. Because she is the staff of one—to advise applicants, write letters, answer the phone daily from 8 to 4:30, including lunch hours.

●

"I could die in here," she said from her office this week while still racked by the flu. "I should be in bed but there's just no way of staying home."

For two days Mrs. Affleck dragged herself to work, only to have to quit at noon. Then last Friday she stayed off all day and spent the weekend in bed too.

A veteran of 10 years with the citizenship court in Vancouver, she suggests that the government's austerity kick has kept it from hiring the one or two extra staff needed locally.

While the work day is supposed to end at 4:30, she says she rarely gets away before 5:30. Her lunch hour is one of the office's busiest times as others use their lunch hour to do business with her.

It's even tough to get away to the washroom for a few minutes. A coffee break is only a dream.

●

To top it off, this past week has been the busiest by far since the office opened.

So. Mrs. Affleck got on the phone to her boss in Vancouver. She doesn't want that conversation quoted but her message must have been pretty plain.

An assistant is scheduled to arrive Tuesday from Ottawa.

Ship Shuffle By Ex-Mayor

An emergency switch of ships has been made by former mayor Hugh Stephen and Mrs. Stephen.

They have been standing by in Vancouver waiting to board the typhoid-stricken P. & O. liner Oronsay for a two-month cruise.

They left Vancouver Friday afternoon en route to Hawaii on board the Oronsay's sister ship, Oriana.

They will wait there until the Oronsay arrives. Their daughter Susan said today they expect the waiting period to be two or three weeks.

Health board officials say 21 Greater Victorians who were aboard the Oronsay have reported for tests.

Sluggish Start For Olah Fund

Contributions to a fund set up to help pay expenses incurred and money lost by Nick George Olah are coming in slowly Nels Granewall, University of Victoria financial aid officer, said today.

He said, however, the slow start doesn't represent the attitude of the public.

He said many persons have written sympathetic letters.

Olah, 21, fled the United States last week with his wife Linda in an elaborately planned escape. A Canadian citizen, he faced draft evasion charges in the U.S.

The fund was established Thursday to raise a minimum of $3,000 to cover expenses including $1,000 bail forfeited when the Olahs left the U.S., $750 in college tuition fees turned over to their American lawyer, $800 loaned to Norman Wright, Uvic student council president who organized the rescue, and $700 covering articles pawned by Olah for living expenses.

Tony Hodge, a fund trustee at UBC, is also collecting money.

The Vancouver Sun and the Victoria Daily Times jointly paid the Olah's $500 for the exclusive first story of their flight. The arrangement was made by the newspapers after the couple had arrived in Victoria and was not a factor in their decision to leave the United States.

Gov't Won't Budge On Finance Formula

Mediocrity Feared By Board Chairman

An unyielding government spending policy means growing school districts are doomed to mediocrity, the chairman of the Greater Victoria school board said today.

He was commenting on word from Education Minister Donald Brothers Friday that no changes are planned in B.C.'s controversial education financing formula.

School boards will still have to take their case to the people for operating expenses above the formula limits, Brothers told the Times.

And he has written all school boards to warn them there will be no concessions.

● ● ●

Last year the department of education approved some additional grants after a handful of school boards submitted extra spending plans to ratepayers and had them turned down.

Brothers' statement amounts to a rejection of requests by the B.C. School Trustees' Association for a change in the formula, particularly its referendum requirement.

James Campbell, president of the BCSTA, had expressed optimism changes would be made after a meeting with the provincial cabinet earlier this month.

The formula can lead to a referendum where a school district exceeds 110 per cent of the basic education program, set by the government on a provincial average basis.

● ● ●

Jameson said today that rural school districts which find themselves growing rapidly into urban centres are the ones which will suffer most from the formula.

"As they grow they won't be able to implement the programs demanded of urban boards."

Youngsters needing special counselling, for example, will probably not get it.

Jameson said the indication at the moment is that the Greater Victoria board "with a reasonable amount of restriction" will be able to come up with an operating budget this year within the formula limit.

Several factors could change the picture in the future, he said. Probably the major one is salaries, for administration and teachers.

If the wage bill takes a major jump, either through bargaining or arbitration rulings, "it could make it very difficult to operate."

BIDS CALLED ON PAT BAY REBUILDING

Tenders have been called for reconstruction of almost three miles of the Patricia Bay Highway to freeway standards.

Bids will be made public Feb. 3 and work is expected to take several months.

The 2.95 mile stretch, from Rogers Avenue to Cherry Tree Bend, will be built to four-lane divided highway standards with overpasses.

Heavy traffic on the stretch of road is likely to slow construction progress.

'Enforce Law On Firearms'

The B.C. Federation of Agriculture has asked the provincial government to enforce its Firearms Act prohibiting persons to carry firearms — guns, revolvers and rifles — without a permit.

Federation manager Richard Stocks said farmers feel rigid controls for the carrying of firearms was in the interest of society.

"I believe 90 per cent of the people of this province are in favor of strict controls," he said. "But nothing is being done to enforce the act."

Time and again, he said, farmers have run across drivers with guns, rifles and revolvers in their cars. Their owners were without permits.

★ ★ ★

He said children with .22 rifles and shooting at wildlife indiscriminately was not an unfamiliar scene in the province.

"A .22 rifle is one of the most dangerous weapons," he said. "Many people think it is practically harmless because the bullet is small. But it can kill."

Stocks said farmers have been bothered by people wandering across their lands with guns.

"The trouble if you don't crack down on firearms, gun carrying will creep in — just as it has in the United States," he said.

Here's Handy Dandy Gadget When the Big Switch Comes

By AB KENT

Arnold R. Detrick can hardly wait for the day a foot becomes 30.48 centimeters (or centimetres), or 3 15-16 inches becomes 100 millimeters (millimetres).

He has been ready for Canada's switch to the metric system for some time, and his frequent thoughts about the coming snarl of changing English linear measurement to French millimeters, centimeters, meters and kilometers have resulted in the Metriputer.

His copyrighted conversion guide, or Metriputer, works like a slide rule to change inches and feet accurately into their metric equivalents, and vice versa.

CHANGES STARTED

Detrick notes that hospitals have begun the changeover here, and in Britain the switch is on in the form of new pence in the money system.

Friday in the House of Commons Canada's Trade Minister Jean-Luc Pepin tabled a white paper endorsing metric conversion, a move hailed by the Conservative opposition.

Detrick's guide is a basic instrument dealing in inches-to-metric primarily. It does not provide for yards and miles but there are a few handy equivalents printed on the face and rear of the Metriputer, such as one yard equals .9144 meters; one kilometer equals .6214 land miles equals .53 land miles; one nautical mile equals 6,076.115 feet.

The inventor, now is "74½," retired in 1960, a former builder in San Francisco. He and his wife arrived here—almost on spec—two years ago.

"We just got tired of the big city," he said, explaining that about 38 years ago he had spent an hour here and the impression remained with him.

"So when we decided to move from San Francisco, I said 'Let's go to Victoria,' and we've adopted Victoria as our home."

KEPT BUSY

His invention has kept his mind busy ever since.

"When I got interested in the difference between inches and centimeters, I couldn't find a satisfactory ruler or direct-reading slide rule, and one thing led to another," Detrick recalled.

At this time he is not interested in marketing the rights.

"I would rather be active myself," he explained.

So he is turning out a few at a time by hand, using steel venetian blind stock for the body. He is looking into the use of photosensitive aluminum for reproducing a wear-resistant scale.

Ultimately, the device probably will be mass-produced. At least Detrick hopes demand for the Metriputer will necessite assembly line methods.

And that will be his contrinution to his adopted home.

And for Cooks, Just Forget It

By PAT DUFOUR

The federal government's bid to convert to the metric system threatens to throw a whammy into many an amateur cook's repertoire.

Deciphering today's recipes into the updated parlance will demand the mental agility of a mathematical genius:

"Take a cup of flour (that's 284 millimetres), add two tablespoons of sugar (let's see, it says here one tablespoon is 17.758 cubic centimetres) . . ."

It's enough to make any young bride or kitchen-dabbling hubby throw his pots and pans out of the window.

★ ★ ★

Luckiest of all are those haphazard hash-makers who prefer to rely on a little dash of instinct . . . an extra pinch here, another little spot of seasoning there.

They can ignore the threat of coming mathematical gyrations.

But for the many whose culinary expertise is dependant on following a recipe down to the last crossed T, the proposed switch is bad news.

Their goose may very well be cooked.

Arthur Mayse . . .

STAFFERS AT THE SPCA Animal Shelter on Napier Lane need no clock to tell them that the home-from-work scramble has begun. A phone rings, and the voice at the other end reports that a dog, or more rarely, a cat, has been hit by a car.

Other such calls may follow before the rush is over.

The life led by man's best friend in the city is not necessarily a happy one, says shelter manager David Beeching, who sees dogs by the hundred come and go each year.

★

Take the matter of life-expectancy, for instance. Canine statistics give the country dog a normal expectancy of 15 years. But transfer him to town and his span is drastically reduced.

Traffic hazard and pesticides help pull it down. The big-city dog is ahead of the average if his lifetime exceeds a mere four and a half years.

At this point, I asked Beeching whether any trends are readable from the Shelter ebb and flow.

"Not just from that," he said, to a bow-wowed accompaniment from one of his guests. "I've been relating the dog to his society for 50 years."

★

There's a strong present trend toward the "city dog".

He's small, and where living space is limited, that's a governing factor. Increasingly, those who come dog-seeking to the shelter lean on it.

The beagle, corgi or dashshund which winds up at the shelter isn't likely to linger there. Also, a standard question now asked about a pup is, 'How big will he be when he's grown?''

However, not everybody wants a small dog, and an outer suburban trend seems to indicate that the fear of violence so prevalent among middle-class Americans is seeping into Canada.

"There's a tendency for men working in the city but living a little way out to want German shepherds," Beeching told me. "What they're after isn't so much a pet as a guard dog that will protect their wives when they're away."

Advice sometimes offered is to get a goose instead. A goose in the yard can be counted on to set up a warning clatter if a stranger encroaches on its territory. It can also display daunting hostility toward strangers.

The shelter people have a pretty sound gauge of the trend toward apartment living from the incidence of callers with the same sad tale to tell.

★

'We're moving into an apartment,' it runs, "and we can't take our dog with us. So we decided the best thing to do was find him another home. We don't want to, but . . . '

Here a shrug and a sigh, and maybe a hand dropped to caress a furry head.

In terms of popularity and demand, the poodle has displaced all other breeds. He's the intelligent clown of dogdom, to quote Beeching, and when untoward circumstance brings a poodle to the shelter, its stay is short.

★

From poodles, we moved on to consider the folly of spoiling dogs, who take advantage of such coddling to reverse the normal process and boss their masters. This was a delicate topic, and I ducked from under it with a change of subject.

I pointed out that even the most biddable male dog is inclined to take off for parts unknown when the breeze wafts a scent equivalent to "Temptation', 'Ambush', or 'Evening in Paris'.

Quite so, Beeching agreed, and the shelter is speedily made aware when that condition exists.

One bitch in heat will bring in as many as 25 protesting calls a day from nearby residents, who find the neighborhood dog population suddenly doubled or trebled.

Pills can be bought that will ease this situation, and the shelter maintains a shared-cost spaying program in which 193 owners of female dogs co-operated last year.

The owner pays half the cost of the operation, and the shelter takes care of the rest. Result, a decrease in the number of unwanted pups in need of homes, and fewer complaints from outraged gardeners.

★

Meanwhile, I see by the clock that it's 4:30 of a dullish afternoon.

In the next half-hour, it's probable that someone at the shelter will answer a ringing phone, and learn that a pet on the loose has been reduced to a minor statistic.

For a pooch at large in the city, it's a dog's life!

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Everything must go at M & E . . .

It's definite . . . it's irrevocable . . . and to us it's surpassingly sad . . . but the Madam and Eve Shop is closing its doors for the last time on Jan. 31 . . . Kaput! . . . Fini! . . . Meanwhile, there's the most stupendous sale going on . . . Everything must be cleaned out by the end of this month . . that means bargains, bargains, BARGAINS! . . . Prices have been slashed with a ruthlessness we've never before witnessed in all the years we've been writing this column! . . . Positively everything . . . on the racks . . . on the shelves . . . is reduced by at least 50% . . . We just couldn't believe some of the price tags we looked at! . . . If you'd like to get in on some of this bonanza . . . run . . . don't walk . . . to Madam and Eve . . . it will be little short of a miracle if you don't find something you adore . . . at a ridiculously low price which ought to make you blush! . . . We noticed Mary Quant spring coats for $35 . . . A $75 lace and chiffon party dress marked down to $20 . . . A navy knit pantsuit with pure silk print blouse for just $35 . . . Raincoats and topcoats . . . skirts and blouses . . . sweaters and scarves and caps . . . Witty idea of a N.Y. designer for summer is a woven plaid shirtdress worn with a seersucker striped pinafore.

Clothes to shine under the sun . . .

Stepping into Eaton's Import Room the other day was a bit like stepping into springtime . . . and the gay world of cruising and sunning under southern skies . . . Light colored, summery clothes everywhere in sight . . . for you lucky ladies who are taking off for warmer climes . . . Cruise clothes from French Riviera designers include a new fabric this year . . . called fibranne . . . looks like linen but doesn't crease . . . Saw one of these in a sunny yellow . . . sleeveless and with the newly popular V neck . . . A very smart Givenchy shirtwaist dress . . . citrus green silk . . . exemplifies the new look for spring with its dropped waistline and pleated skirt . . . We like Patou's white waffle weave dress with lattice sleeves and pockets . . . and the black and white polka dot Givenchy summer suit made of a new stretch fabric . . . (we imagine this might come in mighty handy if one gained a pound or two in the course of one's travelling!) . . . Another interesting model from the Riviera shows the patchwork theme . . . it's brown fibranne with V-neck and cut-in shoulders . . . with diagonally appliqued surrealistic design across the front in an odd combination of colors . . . navy and hot pink, no less! . . . Sounds wild, but it's actually very sophisticated . . . in fact sophistication is probably the best word to describe all these lovely clothes in . . . Eaton's Import Room, 382-7141, local 242.

Stretching is a wonderful exercise. If you can stretch every muscle in your body every day you'll never have problems.

Glorious crystal from Galway Bay . . .

It seems that word leaked out some time ago that Sydney Reynolds were expecting a first-time-ever shipment of Galway Crystal . . . and quite a few people who are lovers of fine crystal have been waiting to hear word of its arrival . . . Well, it's here now . . . and we saw it this week . . . and it's breathtakingly beautiful! . . . There are three complete suites of glasses . . . The O'Brien suite, with its criss-cross diamond cut suggesting the castles of the illustrious Thomond family . . . the Claddagh suite . . . tall sails silhouetted against a glistening sea, in the form of a lower border of diamonds surmounted by vertical incisions . . . And the square-patterned Ardmore suite . . . solid, proud as the Celtic kings of old Erin . . . The sparkle and lustre of this magnificent crystal is something to behold! Every piece is individually hand blown and fashioned entirely by hand . . . with the artistry and craftsmanship for which the Irish are famous . . . Quality rather than quantity is the objective of the makers of Galway Crystal, Mr. Reynolds explained to us . . . and this being the case, it's naturally not inexpensive . . . but after all, few things worth having come cheap, do they? . . . This is the first time Galway Crystal has ever been sold in Canada . . . and sole Canadian agent for it is . . . Sydney Reynolds Ltd., 801 Government St., 383-3931.

And then there's the philosophy that holds it's better to be fair, fat and forty than fatigued, fretful and faded!

Shop Miss Frith's for a lovely wedding . . .

Viyella housecoats at Saba's . . .

Most of the Viyella housecoats we'ev seen in the past have been either uncompromisingly utilitarian or distinctly boudoir-ish . . . so we were quite delighted with the new style of long Viyella housecoat Saba's have just got in . . . It strikes a happy compromise, we think . . . as appropriate in the morning when you're getting the kids ready for school, as in the evening when you're sitting around the TV . . . This new gown is floor length, semi-fitted, buttons right down the front . . . Long sleeves are gathered into a cuff, and it has a high, pointed collar bound with satin and finished with a satin tie . . . Colors are blue, green or red, printed all over with a small pretty paisley pattern . . . Sizes small, medium and large . . . and the price a very modest $29.95 . . . We don't suppose we need tell you about all the virtues of Viyella . . . how light it is, yet how pleasantly warm . . . how beautifully it washes, with no fear of shrinkage or colors running . . . We honestly believe every busy woman should own a Viyella housecoat . . . and we're sure you'll like this smart new model . . . How about investing some of that Christmas cheque in one?

At the same time, you might replenish your lingerie supply at worthwhile savings . . . Saba's January lingerie sale has been on for about a week now, but there's still a good selection of all sorts of things left . . . Saba Bros. Limited, 1130 Douglas St., 384-0561.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Lest They Forget

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: We hear so much about the disgusting behavior of our nation's youth. We never seem to hear about the "silent majority" who are not troublemakers.

I would like to relate our experience: A month ago, our 17-year-old son died of leukemia. While the response of our friends was overwhelming, it came nowhere near that of teen-agers in our community. These youngsters took it upon themselves to make two collections. One for a blanket of flowers for the casket — in their school colors, and another ($400) to be given to leukemia research in our son's name.

As if that were not enough, every day, since the funeral, some of his schoolmates have stopped by to visit us and ask if they can be helpful. The high school has virtually adopted our 11-year-old son as their "mascot." They have secured special permission for him to ride the band bus, play in the band, and to participate in half-time activities.

Our experience has convinced us that if the youth of our community is an example of the younger generation, we have nothing to fear in leaving the world in their capable hands. Sincerely — Norma.

DEAR NORMA: I agree. There are many young people of whom we can be very proud. And judging from the way those teen-agers rallied round you and your family, I would say that your son was surely one of them.

DEAR ABBY: What does a mother do when strangers stop in a supermarket to admire her baby, and they have the audacity to touch the baby's face! Men will put their finger out for my daughter to grab it. I don't know how clean some of these men are, and you know babies will put their own fingers right into their mouths.

I enjoy having people admire my child, but I don't want them spreading germs all over her. My daughter rides in the infant seat in the shopping cart, and it is so easy for someone to get to her. One lady actually bent down and kissed her on the forehead.

I have tried carrying the baby, but I have a bad back. In the laundromat I've had people ask "May I hold her?" and take her from me without waiting for an answer!

Please put this in your column before Thursday, as I market then, and Friday is my laundry day. Thank you.—Arkansas Mother.

DEAR MOTHER: Since most strangers who become overly affectionate toward children in supermarkets do so impulsively, this probably won't help much, but it's worth mentioning.

DEAR ABBY: This is for the lady who signed herself GOING CRAZY, because her husband was a "pack rat:"

First, ask yourself, "Do I want a neat, tidy home alone, or is it worth a little clutter to have him there? I assume you want him there or you wouldn't have written to Abby.

For 12 years I have served meals "buffet style" directly from the pots on the stove because even our table is too cluttered to serve "family style." I would not know how to act in a neat, well-ordered home, but given 15 minutes notice, I could entertain the President, and I'd have a cute story about how we came to have a drill press in the bedroom and an oil drum in the living room. (I'd give the oil drum a psychedelic paint job with wild flowers on it and I'd dare him to touch my "masterpiece.")

I would also throw away a few things at a time from the back of the shelves. (He'll never miss them.)

Make a game of it. It's fun. If you can't lick 'em, join 'em, I say. Maybe I'm crazy, too, but I'm happy. And think of all the work I save not having to set the table three times a day. — Loves Her Pack Rat.

DEAR ABBY: That Disgusted Sister who says her 42-year-old brother wants to trade in his 36-year-old wife for "an old wrinkled grandmother of 50" doesn't know everything either. I would not trade my Susy who is 81 years old for any of those wiggly, loose jointed 20-year-olds. My old lady still has what it takes and I do not mean perhaps.—G. M. In Juda.

Pill Reports 'Inaccurate'

CHICAGO (UPI) — The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists says it "deplores inaccurate or sensational reports" on birth control pills.

College president Mr. Michael Newton issued the statement Thursday, the second day of congressional hearings on possible wide effects of oral contraceptives.

Newton said the college regards the contraceptives "accepted therapeutic methods.

"The college deplores inaccurate or sensational reports concerning the scientific data on these drugs," Newton said."

"As with any method of therapy, the decision to use them should be made on the basis of a conference between a patient and her doctor," he said.

Fat Cat Faces Future Shortage

PETERSHAM, England (UPI) — Joseph, a five-year-old gourmet cat, has inherited £300 ($720), but it may not be enough to finance him in the style of living to which he has become accustomed.

The will of Joseph's elderly mistress, Agatha Higgins, specified the money was to assure he continues his daily menu of fish, rabbit and cream. The 28-pound tabby has a distinct preference for cream instead of milk, the will said.

"This is for my dear cat, Joseph, who has been my affectionate companion and for whom it is my desire that he should be assured of a happy home when I shall be gone," Miss Higgins said in the will.

She turned Joseph and the money over to Marguerite Chorley, a longtime companion.

Miss Chorley said the money probably would be insufficient for Joseph's discriminating tastes.

"I don't know how I'm going to manage," she said. "He won't touch milk and insists on the best fish."

Miss Higgins also left over 75,000 pounds ($185,000), most of it directed to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

WHAT TO DO WHEN A MAXI MEETS A MINIMUM OF SPACE

"I can't even see my feet," commented University of Victoria student Lissa Brand as she demonstrated the dangers of getting your maxi mixed up with the pedals of your car. Quite apart from the damage to the hemline, the maxi could become a hazard to health in an emergency.

The British Columbia Automobile Association suggests that maxi wearers take the first step—or should that be hitch—to safety before they enter the car. As Lissa demonstrates above, this involves lifting the hemline well above ankle level.

Next, sit sideways and swing the legs around until they are in place. The hem should now be well off the floor. Any excess skirting can be spread out to the sides. This may sound easy, Lissa found, but it takes a bit of practice to do it gracefully.

Leaving the car can be a problem too. When you are late for class, it's just an annoyance, but what if you are a passenger and the driver drives off before you are free? The solution is to make sure your coat is out before you close the door. (Robin Clarke Photos)

Anglican Church Eyes Draft Dodgers

The Anglican Church is trying to find out if there is a draft dodgers' organization in Victoria, a spokesman said Friday.

Anne Davison, social work consultant in the church's Toronto headquarters was in the city to speak to the Anglican Church Women Diocesan Board meeting.

She told the more than 90 women present that American churches have offered to raise money if the Anglican Church will act as liaison with draft dodgers.

Miss Davison said the recent story about the young Canadian man and wife who were helped by Uvic students to leave the U.S. in order to evade the draft has prompted her to make inquiries in the Victoria area.

There are organizations in Eastern Canada which provide information and financial aid to American draft dodgers.

Miss Davison also discussed the Henry Report which outlines the Indian situation in Canada.

It was written by a University of Toronto professor and was tabled at the Anglican general synod in August.

She said the Social Action Unit of the Anglican Church will attempt to implement its findings.

"I have no idea what the Indian stituation on Vancouver Island is, but I am aware the Indians are not struggling against treaties," she said.

Miss Davison recommended that the women read Harold Cardinal's The Unjust Society because "it is an attempt to communicate with us."

Chief Grocer Predicts Death of Home Cooking

VANCOUVER (CP) — Home cooking is on its way out, the president of the Grocery Products Manufacturers Association of Canada predicted recently.

Ernest Steele of Ottawa says convenience eating at fast-food outlets is the coming thing.

"Over the next 10 years, we might get up to the situation where 60 to 70 per cent of all food is eaten outside the home," he said in an interview.

This compares to the 30 to 40 per cent of meals now eaten outside the home.

Mr. Steele said the increase in leisure time is probably the major reason for the expected change in eating habits.

The association represents 75 companies which produce about 75 per cent of all food products manufactured in Canada.

Counsellors Appointed For Senior Citizens

Two new senior citizen counsellors have been appointed for the Victoria area, it was announced by the Division on Aging, Department of Social Welfare.

The counsellors are Stanley Barwick, No. 435, 1701 Cedar Hill Cross Road, 477-2666, and Robert Webb, 1676 Lansdowne Road, 592-9463.

Senior citizen counsellors are volunteer workers with the Division on Aging acting as sources of information for elderly people who need advice on problems or community services.

Mrs. Annie McVie, 1740 Fairfield Road, was the first counsellor to be appointed in the Victoria area.

Dentists Try Visual Aids To Tell Tots About Decay

MONTREAL (CP) — A Montreal dentist says that anyone who still has all his natural teeth at the age of 18 "ought to be able to keep them until death."

The key to maintaining strong, healthy teeth, says Dr. Georges Perrault, lies in teaching pre-school children to brush their teeth regularly.

Dr. Perrault, director of a children's dental clinic at the University of Montreal, is one of a growing number of dentists who specialize in children's teeth. There are about 12 such specialists in Montreal at present.

"It's all in motivation," he believes. "It is essential that we find the vocabulary which will make them (children) see that it is possible to fight a war against bacteria."

SQUIRMING BACTERIA

To this end, dentists are beginning to equip their waiting rooms with audio-visual material. Via slides children can see microscopic visions of bacteria squirming over and among teeth.

The youngster's first reaction should be to run for his toothbrush to dislodge these "bugs," says Dr. Perrault.

The slides also demonstrate the correct way to brush, and admonish the tots not to forget to massage their gums and to pay special attention to gaps where food particles might be hiding.

Dr. Perrault says mothers often have the illusion of providing their children with the maximum dental care merely by curtailing the amount of candy and sweets available in the home.

But while it is true that sugar provides an ideal milieu for bacteria to thrive in, eliminating candy from the diet does not reduce the need for good and regular brushing.

In fact, says Dr. Perrault, research has shown that depriving a child of sugar may produce tension. This stress ultimately may set off the development of cavities.

The clinic has prepared questionnaires for the young patients, and results show that more children below the age of six brush regularly than do those of 10 years and above.

This suggests that the influence of the mother on dental hygiene diminishes as the child matures.

One possible method of cutting down on cavities is painting both baby and second teeth with fluorine, if the community has not already fluoridated the drinking water.

NO EXPLANATION

Despite many advances made in dental care, Dr. Perrault says dentists still are unable to explain why, within one family, some members will have strong teeth and some will have poor, soft teeth.

Six or seven per cent of all children will never have cavities while others have decayed teeth by the time they are 18 months old.

In the final analysis, he says, mothers perhaps should be reminded of something they know but often ignore—it is not up to the children to decide what they are going to eat.

Pocket Survival Kit Needed For Sunday Walk in the Woods

By JEAN SHARP

TORONTO (CP) — it may sound extreme to say you should take a survival kit with you when you head for the outdoors on a winter day, but about 2,000 people get lost every winter in Ontario. Probably all the other provinces could match the statistic.

Bert Berlund says he has known people to get turned around—and therefore into trouble—on a Sunday afternoon walk in the woods.

Mr. Berglund has been teaching survival courses for 26 years, for the Swedish and Canadian air forces and as a private citizen for the Toronto Anglers' and Hunters' Association.

He says the survival kit he recommends is about two by four by three inches and will fit in a pocket along with a compass and map and a good pair of sun glasses. It takes only about half an hour in bright snow to suffer snow blindness.

TAKE USABLE MATCHES

The kit should contain aspirin, adhesive bandages, aluminum foil for cooking, wrapping, as a reflector for the fire and to signal aircraft searching for you, bouillon cubes, unsweetened chocolate, fish hooks and line, about 25 feet of nylon string to put up a shelter, repair your clothing, antiseptic of some kind, water purifying tablets and, most important of all, waterproof matches.

"You don't usually need purifying tablets, but it doesn' hurt to have them. You can purify water with household bleach—put two drops of it in a cup of water.

"You can waterproof matches by sealing the box with wax, or by dipping each match head in paraffin. When you need it, just flip the paraffin off. A paper match is no good; you want a match that will light on anything.

"You should also have a piece of plastic about four by eight feet to make a shelter."

PANIC CAN BE FATAL

If you do get lost or your car or snowmobile breaks down far from base, Mr. Berglund says, try not to panic.

"A lot depends on the frame of mind you're in. The biggest enemy is panic. It can kill you if you are in a situation where you don't feel at home. Your behavior for the first half hour may determine if you will live. Sit down and think, get used to the thought that you are lost.

"Cold is the biggest enemy after panic. Collect wood, and when you think you have enough, double it. Get a fire going, be as comfortable as you can, then you can survive the first night and re-assess the situation in the morning.

STAY IN ONE PLACE

"We recommend that you stay put in most cases. People often don't realize how far they've travelled. They set out trying to walk back and exhaust themselves.

"Don't expose yourself to accidents, either, climbing trees, trying to right a snowmobile or lift a car out.

"And remember, it takes about 10 days to get a full-scale search going."

LET SOMEONE KNOW

Mr. Berglund says one of the best hings you can do to avoid trouble is to make sure someone knows exactly where you will be and when you should be expected back.

He has a number of incidental tips.

If you are at a resort you should look at a map before you go out, place yourself and take the compass with you.

If you are going ice fishing, carry dubs. They have a handle about three inches long with a spike attached. If you fall in, you can dig them into the ice to pull yourself out.

If you are going skiing, carry extra clothing and an extra aluminum ski tip for emergency repair of a broken ski.

And always dress sensibly.

Montreal Crime Solution Rate Lowest

By GERARD McNEIL

OTTAWA (CP) — Robbery statistics from Canada's 12 major metropolitan areas show Montreal leading in almost everything but solutions.

The robbery rate per 100,000 inhabitants in Montreal is three times the national average at 117.3, a figure approached only by the Vancouver rate of 97.3.

The solution rate for Montreal is 21 per cent. Only Quebec City's is worse at 20.9 per cent.

Neither Montreal nor Quebec City has a metropolitan police force. Toronto has, and its police solved more robberies than did those of Montreal, though there were only half as many.

The figures come from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics report on crime in 1968. It is the first comprehensive annual report in this area.

It shows that more than one-quarter the country's 8,047 robberies took place in metropolitan Montreal, which led in muggings and robbery of banks, retail stores, gas stations and residences.

Vancouver exceeded Montreal in one category, robbery of business establishments.

EDMONTON SOLVED MOST

Among the 12 cities, only Edmonton managed a 50-per-cent solution rate.

Montreal had 2,358 robberies and cleared 495. Toronto had 1,219 and cleared 566, a solution rate of 46.4 per cent against Montreal's 21 per cent.

The significant offence rate per 100,000 population was 117.3 in Montreal, 97.3 in Vancouver and 81.4 in Edmonton.

Police had less luck with muggings than with any other of seven categories. Only 29.4 per cent of the 3,186 street robberies in the 12 cities were solved.

Montreal led in numbers, with 1,218, of which 235 were cleared. Toronto was next with 677, clearing 311, and Vancouver had 422, clearing 101.

Montreal also led in the offence rate per 100,000 inhabitants at 60.6. However, Halifax was second at 57.1 per cent and Winnipeg third at 52.1 per cent.

OTTAWA SAFEST

The safest city streets in the country by this measure were those of Ottawa, which had an offence rate of 9.4 per cent. London, Ont., and Quebec City were next.

In other categories:

Chartered banks: Montreal reported 95 robberies, solved 22. Toronto was next with 50, solving 28. Vancouver had 19, solving 16.

Residences: 246 Montreal dwellings were robbed; police cleared 56 cases. Vancouver reported 138 such robberies, 72 solutions. Toronto had 127, solving 68. The offence rate was highest in Calgary, Vancouver and Montreal.

Retail stores: Montreal had 510, solving 127. Toronto had 173, solving 72, Quebec City had 40, solving 11. Montreal, Quebec City and Toronto led in offence rates.

Gas Stations: Montreal had 63, solving 12. Toronto had 27, solving 10. Vancouver had 18, solving three. The offence rate was highest in Quebec City, Ottawa and Montreal.

Other business establishments: Vancouver had 174 such robberies, solving 59. Montreal had 146, solving 19. Toronto had 80, solving 30. The offence rate was highest in Vancouver, Edmonton and Montreal.

Garden Crop Rotation Based on Logic

Tips For Home Gardeners

By JACK BEASTALL

Jack

One problem in the average home vegetable garden is the inability to practice good rotation of crops due to the small space involved.

The value of crop rotation in suppression of pests and diseases has long been known.

In the Bible explicit instructions were given on length of time a piece of ground should be cropped and number of years it should lie fallow.

Today, when man has destroyed the natural food of insects and forced them to depend on his food crops for survival, this old law of rotation assumes greater importance than ever before.

We have several examples in the Victoria area of an increase in pests or diseases when a certain kind of plant is grown in most gardens.

* * *

First was the Cotoneaster web worm which appeared when nearly everyone planted Cotoneaster horizontalis as a wall shrub. Hundreds of these plants were destroyed. Now it is impossible to grow in some areas.

The many varieties of Lawson's Cypress are an example of results of intensive planting. Lawson Cypress root-rot appeared, and once it became established in the soil was found to spread with the natural flow of soil moisture.

Balsam wooly-aphid became firmly established on the balsams that form a high percentage of the timber trees on Vancouver Island. From these the pest has spread to cultivated species of the genus Abies, many of which are desirable garden plants.

The popularity of junipers today has led to the spread of pear trellis-rust.

Continued search for food grains immune to various rust diseases has been forced because acres of land have been sown to the same grain crops for years.

In the home vegetable garden we have similar conditions created through growing the same crops year after year. There is club-root disease of cruciferous vegetables, carrot rust-fly, cabbage root-maggot, cabbage worm and the wireworm.

Another reason for practicing crop rotation exists. Each vegetable takes from the soil more of one mineral than of another. Over a period of years the soil can be depleted of that mineral in an available form and this results in an unsatisfactory crop.

* * *

Rotation of vegetable crops maintains a better balance of soil minerals by using surpluses and allowing deficiencies to rebuild.

Theoretically we can avoid a lot of trouble from pests, diseases and soil deficiencies if we devide the vegetable plot into three sections and rotate the crops from section to section.

Theoretically, I say, because the average vegetable plot is quite small and when we till in spring we mix the soil over the entire area and defeat our purpose in making the different sections.

To be successful in practice, the vegetable garden should consist of three plots of soil isolated from one another by other plantings, so that the soil from one section is not mixed with soil from another.

Even then we take a chance on soil diseases being carried from section to section with natural flow of soil water and other agencies, but this is not a problem unless a definite soil disease exists.

Mental outlook and tradition are main reasons we keep our vegetables all together in one part of the garden.

A change in outlook and the breaking of tradition could be beneficial to ourselves through our vegetables.

* * *

At least one gardener has shown the advantages of three separate vegetable plots, not because of advance knowledge but purely from circumstances.

A vegetable grower for years, he purchased a property with no vegetable garden laid out and was obliged to use unplanted areas.

Four small plots were available which gave him the idea of practicing rotation as outlined in gardening books. After 10 years his plantings are exceptionally free from pests and diseases.

* * *

The whole concept of a garden is changing. Instead of being a place of work from which we are trying to escape, it is becoming the place for escape from larger problems.

This is causing us to take a critical look at our layouts; it is causing many older gardens to be remodelled and new gardens to be built to designs that flout tradition.

We are, essentially, bringing our gardens out of the 19th century and applying 20th century thinking.

Since the 20th century is nearly over, we should probably apply more advanced thinking to our garden improvements; making century 21 gardens. But few of us are caught up with the present, let alone able to see into the future.

Nevertheless, since a definite change in gardening is taking place, it behooves the home gardener to let his imagination run a little wild simetimes. It may result in sound, though unconventional ideas.

* * *

One such idea is this three or four-plot vegetables garden divided by other permanent plantings.

The most unusual and fascinating I ever saw existed in Victoria some 25 years ago. The owner had mixed vegetables into flower beds and borders with such delicate taste the overall effect was charming and wholly delightful.

The geometrical pattern of butterhead lettuce, purple leaves of beet and feathery foliage of carrots blended beautifully with the colorful annual and perennial flowers.

Original, unconventional, but highly successful.

WEEK'S WORK

Some seed sowing can be started indoors if suitable conditions of light, air and warmth can be provided. Artificial lighting will help keep growth sturdy. Sow seed of carnations, snapdragons, lobelia. Also pansy, geum, delphinium, lupin, aquilegia. All need warmth to germinate, but cooler growing with perfect overhead light.

Fibrous and tuberous rooted begonias can be raised from seed sown now, but will only grow at 60 deg. F. or higher.

Canna seed is hard and slow to sprout unless soaked 12 hours in cold water or a few minutes in hot. Sow in sandy soil, at 75 deg. F. Will bloom this year outdoors if weather warm.

Branches of early blooming shrubs have buds already initiated. They will open indoors if cut and immersed in warm water for two hours before setting up in a warm room.

Check stakes and ties on fruit trees, and on all newly planted trees.

Check tubers in storage — dahlias, begonias, gloxinias. Keep them as cool and dry as possible without shrivelling.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN TOP BRITISH PAPER

LONDON — The Manchester Guardian has been named the best British newspaper of 1969.

Noted for its lively writing and social conscience, The Guardian was named "Newspaper of The Year" in competition against 11 other national daily and Sunday papers. The award is presented annually by the Granada Television Company and is considered Britain's most prestigious press honor.

* * *

Announcing its choice Granada praised "improvements in various sections of the paper" and said its judges were most impressed by "the revival of the quality of the writing." Guardian news and feature stories are distributed in North and South America by the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service.

Runner-up to The Guardian was The Financial Times.

* * *

Last year Granada, which distributes a series of awards to newspapers and journalists named Guardian writer Harry Jackson as Britain's best reporter of 1968 for his coverage of several international crises.

The Guardian announced after receiving its award that it will initiate further improvements Monday. These are to include more space for international news, including reports from the Times-Post service to which The Guardian will subscribe from the beginning of February.

STAMP NEWS

Samoa Commemorative

By ROBERT G. OLIPHANT

On Jan. 19, Western Samoa (Saoa i Sisifo) will place on sale four pictorials celebrating their 8th anniversary of independence. (Jan. 1 was the actual anniversary date).

Portrayed area: 2-sene, the Seventh-Day Adventists Sanatorium in Apia; 7-sene, the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Apia, and a portrait of Fr. Louis Violette (1811-87), who arrived at Samoa in 1845; 20-sene, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Mormons) at Tuasivi; and 22-sene, the London Missionary Society Church at Sapapali'i, and a likeness of a worker for that church, the Rev. John Williams (1796-1839), who first visited Samoa in 1830.

●

This set was designed by Victoria Whiteley, and Format International, Ltd. lithographed them on kava bowl and WS (for Western Samoa) watermarked paper.

Rwanda's 100-franc Christmas stamp, released Dec. 15, reproduces a detail from The Holy Night, a Nativity oil-painting by Correggio (1494-1534).

A 20-paise postage stamp released by India Nov. 23 observes the 500th anniversary of the birth of the founder of the Sikh religious sect, the guru Nnak (d. 1539). Sometime this year, the United States will issue a 6-cent commemorative honoring the American poet and biographer Edgar Lee Masters (1869-1950). He was born in Garnett, Kansas, and he is best remembered for his "Spoon River Anthology."

The vertical-in-format stamp, which will be the first in a series dedicated to American poets, prominently depicts a portrait of Masters enclosed within a circle.

Five likely future candidates for the series are: Dr. William Carlos Williams, Robert Frost, Carl Sandburg, Hilda Doolittle (H.D.), and E. E. Cummings.

A U.S. 6-cent stamped envelope is to be released in New Bedrod, Mass. on March 7. It pays tribute to the whaling industry and to the American novelist Herman Melville (1819-91), who was the author of Moby Dick. (The envelope's oval, blue and white stamp features Capt. Ahab's quarry, the huge white whale Moby Dick). Each envelope will sell for 2-cents above face value.

The British Antarctic Territory came out with a new one pound definitive Dec. 1. The HMS Endurance and a portrait of H.M. Queen Elizabeth II are shown. Bradbury, Wilkinson and Co. Ltd. recess-engraved this pictorial on CA block watermarked paper.

Three adhesives issued Dec. 27 by the Republic of the Sudan commemorate the International Labor Organization's 50th anniversary.

●

Papua and New Guinea placed on sale a 10-cent aerogramme Dec. 11.

On Dec. 10, the Republic of San Mario released a trio depicting paintings by Raphael (1483-1520). They are: 20-liras, Faith: 180-liras, Hope; and 200-liras, Charity.

As the orange shade, black lends the equilibrious design of the Canadian 6-cent definitive a flavor akin to sour grapes.

Computer Taking Over Personnel Selections

OTTAWA (CP) —A computer will do the fishing in "Data Stream," a new personnel inventory system being introduced in the federal public service.

The public service commission, central recruiting and training agency for the service, has developed the system and hopes to have it functioning early this year.

The system will initially affect more than 60,000 federal employees.

They were asked last year to fill out questionnaires on their qualifications. These forms now are being returned and recorded in the computer.

At present, commission officials must sort through hundreds of personnel files each time they want to locate those best qualified for a given opening. These employees are then invited to appear before selection boards for interviews.

"Data Stream" will eliminate the file search. Within minutes names of those with the required qualifications will be in the hands of a commission official. He then may check their files for additional information.

The commission says properly filled out questionnaires when processed by the computer will benefit both employees and staffing officers. Employees will have the opportunity at least once a year of reviewing their records and may revise them at any time.

The occupation categories initially affected by the scheme are professional, administrative, foreign service and technical. Eventually the system could spread to some 200,000 employees.

Public service unions are being kept informed of developments. Union spokesmen say they will welcome the system, provided the merit system of appointment and promotion is not jeopardized.

FLASHBACK ON CANADA

Italians Have Played Major Roles

By BOB BOWMAN

People from Italy, or of Italian extraction, now number one-twentieth of Canada's population. Most of them are living in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta, and British Columbia.

Italians have played important roles in Canada's development from the beginning. The early explorers were from Italy: Columbus, working for Spain; Cabot employed by Britain; and Verrazano, whose voyage to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia in 1524 enabled France to claim Canada. Marconi's successful experiments in trans-Atlantic wireless, using bases in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, have also been historic milestones.

Giovanni da Verrazano was engaged by King Francis I of France to search for lands in the New World because France wanted to compete with Spain and Britain for colonies and a route to the Pacific. He sailed from Dieppe with four ships, but three of them were not seaworthy and he had to leave three of them in the Azores. Then on January 17, 1524, he continued in the "Dauphine" and is believed to have sighted land which is now North or South Carolina. From there he sailed north and entered the Hudson River on the way. One of the world's longest bridges, in New York City, has been named after him.

Then Verrazano continued his voyage past Nova Scotia, and is believed to have circled Newfoundland before returning to France.

Unfortunately his explorations did not end happily. Francis I was defeated by Charles V of Spain. Then Verrazano, who had been a pirate and looted ships on the Spanish Main, was captured by Spain and hanged. At least that is one version of the story. Another is that he was killed and eaten by cannibals in the Antilles during another voyage to North America in 1528.

Other events on January 17:

1651—Jean de Lauzon was appointed Governor of Canada.

1694—Bishop St. Vallier denounced production of comedies and tragedies at Quebec.

1700 — Pierre LeMoyne d'Iberville began building fort near New Orleans.

1840—French-speaking Canadians in Lower Canada protested that they were not consulted about union with Upper Canada.

1861 — Protest meeting in Montreal resulted in U.S. slave being freed in Canada.

1881—Bridge opened between Ottawa and Hull.

1933 — Newfoundland asked Britain to appoint Royal Commission to investigate financial crisis.

1961—Canada returned treasures to Poland that had been kept safely during war.

The Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Pee-Wee is my pony. Sometimes I have to get medicine powder down him by myself. But he never lets me so I can't do it. Is there any way I can do it all by myself?—B.D.

DEAR B.D.: Depends on what you are trying to get down, of course. For most medications, however, you may find an electuary will work. An electuary is a conglomeration of the powdered medication and a sweet syrup, such as honey or molasses. Smear the sweet, gummy mixture a little at a time on his lips and muzzle. Most ponies, even if perverse or puny, will lick off a sweet medication plastered on their lips or noses.

DEAR DR. MILLER: In a dog with heart trouble and fluid in the tissue is it best to give only small amounts of water?—D.D.

DEAR D.D.: The attending veterinarian must make the final determination. In most cases, water consumption would not be restricted, but it may be necessary to occasionally limit the amount of water consumed at any one vomiting. However, the total drinking bout to prevent amount consumed does not usually need to be regulated. In fact, reducing the fluid intake to prevent edema can cause repercussions, including kidney failure.

★ ★ ★

DEAR DR. MILLER: I just read where a well-known new disinfectant spray can kill cats. Yet it says on the can that it is safe to use around pets. How can they print such a thing if it really is dangerous? I just bought some of it and I haven't used it after reading about it. It contains a "phenol" something or other. I don't have a vet for my two cats so I'm writing to you about it before I dare to use the stuff.—P.D.

DEAR P.D.: Many disinfectants use phenol-based derivatives as the basic active ingredient. Because felines are particularly susceptible to phenol poisoning, it would be foolish to take a chance with such products. I can't tell you why the indicated labelling appears on the product—but don't believe the "safe-for-pets" pitch unless a local veterinarian personally okays the product. Speaking of danger, your cats are definitely exposed to other perils if they have never been in to a doctor for their necessary vaccinations. Get them in soon.

★ ★ ★

DEAR DR. MILLER: Because you always say to keep your cat indoors, I'd like to pass this along for your comment. I read somewhere else, and it was also written by someone who should know what they are talking about, that a cat allowed to roam free will have less trouble with hairballs. This statement has been borne out by our own cat, Morpheus. Since we moved and he goes out a lot he hardly ever gags and vomits hairballs in the living room any more.—G.P.

COMMENT: Agreed, the outside cat has less trouble with hairballs than one kept inside. (And the trouble he does have is going to be less apparent on the living room rug.) In fact, felines who "fake out" neighborhood dogs, like cats who play on freeways, hardly ever have hairball problem.

Incriminating Air To Be Returned

OTTAWA (CP) — It will be late this year before police officers will be able to hand over to persons accused of drunk driving a sample of the breath that got them into trouble, House Leader Donald S. Macdonald told the Commons Thursday night.

He was replying to Robert McCleave (PC—Halifax East Hants) who said that a section of the Criminal Code changes providing for the samples was not enacted when the changes were proclaimed last December.

Mr. McCleave, a Halifax lawyer and broadcaster, said many lawyers had doubts about the new law which makes it mandatory for motorists to give breath samples to police officers requesting them.

He said some of these doubts were wiped out by another section of the code which said police officers, on request, were to provide the accused with samples "in a suitable container."

Mr. Macdonald said such a container has yet to be manufactured. One might be available later this year.

Until then motorists could ask for a blood or urine test where facilities for such a test was available.

Crackdown on Terrorism Aim Of New Quebec Justice Head

QUEBEC (CP) — A justice minister by any other name in Quebec, from the viewpoint of activists, is a Remipol.

A Remipol?

It's a derisive distortion of Remi Paul along the Orwellian lines of Minipol, ministry of politics in the police state of the novel 1984.

And it has also had variations in the form of a music scale which reads: Do Re Mi Faciste!

But Remi Paul, Quebec justice minister since last July, is indifferent to the name-calling. What he isn't indifferent to is terrorism.

Even then, he speaks with a flexibility and understanding of some people involved in terrorism, on the rise in Quebec in 1969.

Mr. Paul, 48, says that one of the greatest dilemmas facing him is ensuring that law and order prevail in an increasingly rebellious society, while at the same time protecting the rights of the individual.

WANTS NO RESTRICTIONS

"Individual freedom," he says, "must not be curtailed beyond measure.

"I say beyond measure, because theoretically, man has all the freedom in the world, yet he is called upon daily to give up a measure of this freedom for the common good of mankind.

"Since man can't live outside society, he must conform to the rules of this society, which in turn must adopt laws that ensure that the weakest in society are not at the mercy of the strongest.

"In a democracy, our laws are made to regulate this individual freedom which, however, must not be completely restricted, because then we would have a police state which I, like 99.5 per cent of the population, am opposed to."

A few months ago, anyone would have sworn that the justice minister was livid with anger when he branded bomb-planting terrorists as "crawling invertebrates who aren't even human and who would sell their mothers."

MODIFIED STAND

Mr. Paul has since modified his description of terrorists.

"The majority of terrorists are new Canadians," he says. "Most of them, since they are unemployed and experiencing financial difficulties, are easily recruited and encouraged to do things, the consequences of which they don't always fully appreciate.

"And for fear of retaliation, they are often forced to remain in the group of about 50 hard-core terrorists which make up the brain trust of the movement."

Mr. Paul makes a definite distinction between separatists—"inately fine people (de brave gens)"—and terrorists.

"I say . . . that in the case of 99.8 per cent of the Quebec population (6,000,000), you are dealing with good people. A few have strayed and even there, there may be justification.

"Our separatists are not terrorists—they are nationalists. But in this group of nationalists we find terrorists who have infiltrated themselves over the years."

He concedes there are separatists in the Montreal police department and in the Quebec Provincial Police, but explains:

"It's not impossible. In a group of 3,000 persons, don't you think there'll be differing opinions? It's not because you have a police force that you automatically have a wall preventing undesirable elements from coming in.

"But it is the exception to the be proud of our police forces."

He is confident that the anti-terrorist squad his department set up from three police forces will successfully end Quebec's terrorist activity.

He is worried, however, about the loss of potential economic investments in the province as a result of terrorist activity.

"Because, under the false pretense of promoting the French culture, terrorists are stunting it by hindering the province's economic development."

A staunch federalist in Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand's Union Nationale cabinet, Mr. Paul describes himself as a Canadian and Quebec Nationalist.

But while he respects "the opinion of separatists," he says, he'll be "one of the last persons in the world" to share their philosophy.

MISSING MACHINE-GUN RETURNED

A machine-gun reported missing from an Esquimalt home earlier in the week has been located, Esquimalt police said Friday.

The gun, a Lancaster 9 mm. taken from the home of Robert Reed, 65 Carrie, was inoperable due to a hole drilled in the barrel but police feared it could be repaired.

Reed told police Thursday the old navy boarding gun had been returned by a third party.

'CANDY, DANDY, LIQUOR QUICKER'

LONDON (Reuters) — A survey on drinking habits conducted here bore out Ogden Nash's old dictum: "Candy is dandy, but liquor is quicker."

The survey indicated that alcohol increases a woman's sexual desire.

It was based on questions put to 232 persons by health education officer V. T. Searle-Jordan of London's Hammersmith district.

Reaction Mixed To Legal Lottery

TORONTO (CP)—An announcement that regulations to license lotteries in Ontario for charitable and religious purposes will be ready shortly drew mixed reactions from religious and charitable organizations this week.

Leslie Rowntree, Ontario minister of financial and commercial affairs, announced the regulations would be ready in about a week, adding that the province would not hold a provincial lottery because "it is not a solid basis for taxation."

Ray Auld, executive director of the Ontario Society for Crippled Children, said the society would be very interested in looking into the possibilities of running lotteries as a means of providing further funds for their work.

Archdeacon H. B. Snell, however, said lotteries are against the rules of the Anglican Church and added that "we are not in the gambling business."

Somewhere between those two views stood Rev. Paul Lannan, associate director of the Catholic Information Centre, who predicted the legislation would lead to limited use of lotteries by Roman Catholic parishes.

"I think there will be some use but it will not be too widespread," he said, adding that "it seems if you have a very worthwhile project that's providing a needed service, there are better means than having to go out and sell tickets and push articles."

WANTS METRO CONTROL

Metropolitan Toronto Chairman Albert Campbell said any lottery run for public charitable purposes should be run by the Metro government and not by the cities and individual boroughs in Metro.

He said in an interview any lottery large enough to attract the interest would have to be Metro-wide.

"For lotteries to be useful to a municipality they have to produce a lot of money, something like $1,000,000," he added.

A program for the licensing and control of lotteries, made legal by a recent amendment to the Federal Criminal Code, was prepared by Mr. Rowntree and approved by cabinet Thursday.

The Criminal Code amendments permit charitable and religious organizations to conduct lottery schemes if they have been licensed by the province or a jurisdiction given authority by the province, and if the proceeds are used for charitable or religious purposes.

Mr. Rowntree said the cabinet decided to give municipalities control over religious and charitable lotteries and this will mean "a situation parallel to local option" under the liquor laws.

THEY MAY APPLY

He said no general permission would be given to municipalities to hold their own lotteries, although they may, on application, be licensed.

"Although we are giving a broad definition to 'charity' it is not our intention to see lotteries used to lower the general municipal tax rate," he said.

Some welfare programs and hospital financing might, however, be approved as charitable purposes for municipal lotteries, he added.

The federal bill originally limited the value of prizes at fairs at $35,000 but this was deleted and the limit was left to the discretion of the provinces.

However, "there will be no Las Vegas-type operations in Ontario," the minister said on the operation of casinos.

An interdepartmental committee had been formed to work out procedures and guidelines for Ontario's licensing program, Mr. Rowntree said.

DEATH LIST RELEASED

PARIS (WP) — The Viet Cong Thursday distributed a partial list of 243 South Vietnamese allegedly killed at My Lai and asserted that investigations were under way so that "the assassins will never elude the responsibility for their crimes."

The "incomplete" list, said to be accurate as of two days ago, will be added to as further information is provided by the Communists' "Liberation News Agency," according to Viet Cong spokesman Ly Van Sau.

●

Additionally, the list contained the names of 17 Vietnamese allegedly wounded in the alleged massacre by U.S. troops in March, 1968. But the spokesman declined to estimate the total number of those allegedly killed, which some U.S. press reports have at more than 600.

The spokesman said 89 of the alleged victims ranged in age from one month to 11 years and that 38 others, including 22 women, were between 60 and 80 years old.

●

Renewing Communist comparisons of My Lai to Nazi atrocities in the Second World War such as Lidice in Czechoslovakia, Auschwitz in Poland and Oradour in France, Sai said "several families were exterminated down to their last member."

Reverend Father M. J. McNamara officiated in Our Lady Queen of Peace Church at 7:30 p.m. on November 29, 1969, when Sharon Elaine, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman L. Camsusa, 4725 Pat Bay Highway, became the bride of Mr. Dean Albert Belton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael E. Belton, 3460 Roiston Crescent.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attended by her sister, Miss Joyce Camsusa, as maid of honor, and the groom's sister, Miss Stephanie Belton, as bridesmaid. Misses Lorraine Leggett, Sandra Leggett and Dorie-Anne Leggett, nieces of the bride, were flower girls. Best man was Mr. Michael Belton, the groom's brother, and Messrs. Gary Tory and Colvin McAllister ushered the guests.

After the ceremony a reception was held at Holyrood House. Mr. Leonard Thomas proposed the toast to the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Belton spent their honeymoon in Banff.

In design, location and construction this elegant home offered on the market for the first time — has everything! It is designed to take full advantage of the ever changing sea views. The large foyer and attractive staircase lead up to a gracious living room with raised hearth fireplace and guest dining room. The ultra modern kitchen has featured lighting and adjoining utility and exceptional storage area. Two twin sized bedrooms and a de luxe 4-pce. bathroom. A large secluded patio overlooks the sea. Off the foyer on the main floor is a spacious panelled family room with old brick fireplace and large picture window. The room is warm and tranquil. Another bedroom, bathroom and extra storage complete this level. The entire property is in spotless condition, has beautiful wall-to-wall broadloom throughout and many other de luxe features. The well landscaped grounds need only a minimum of maintenance. The stove, fridge, washer, dryer and all drapes are included in the end price of $51,000 with excellent financing. Don't miss the opportunity of viewing this outstanding property.

5 OR 6 BDRS. — 6¾ PER CENT MORTGAGE
2500' OF EXHILARATION

This is well below replacement. The lot is worth $25,000. You have never witnessed such a view!! You can eat and watch the cruise ships by day or fairyland of a lighted city below you by night. If my wife would let me, I'd buy this place tomorrow. Just think, only $180 P.I.T. with a $17,000 mortgage at 6¾ per cent. The 14'x22' Living Room is "L" shape to 11'x11' Dining Room, both with W-W carpets and 36' of window looking N. E. S. and W. The kitchen has an eating area with sliding glass doors to a huge sundeck. Also, a huge family room about 25' long that could be 2 bedrooms up. On the ground level are six bedrooms, a second 4-piece bathroom, plus a large utility room. Want an in-law suite? Just take the utility room, bathroom and adjacent bedroom, which all have their own separate entrance, and create a kitchen in the utility room. Your large master bedroom has glass doors to the rockeries. You wake up and lie in bed looking out over the city. Really, I entreat you to see this unique setting—one of the top five crests in the lower peninsula. And you drive right to your door. The lot is under application for subdividing. A possible $5,000 profit is yours. My vendors must sell for business reasons. Now reduced to $45,900 and all trades considered. Call Wills of Whittome's for help. Let Whittome's buy your house for cash so you can get this tremendous buy. Phone 388-4271 anytime.

Deaf School Complaints Under Study

Complaints about the administration of Jericho Hill School for the deaf in Vancouver will be studied by Education Minister Donald Brothers, a delegation of parents said Friday following a meeting with the minister.

Mrs. Mary Margaret Moore, leader of a three-woman delegation, said Brothers agreed to report back to them next week on his investigation.

Mrs. Moore said the minister had been asked to remove the school's top two administrators.

At a 2½-hour meeting with Brothers, the women charged there are morale problems, lack of leadership, serious educational deficiencies and health problems as well as a shortage of staff and facilities at the school.

Meanwhile, Minister Without Portfolio Isabel Dawson said in a written statement that studies indicate there is need for a "case-finding" approach to discover the extent of hearing problems in B.C.

Studies being conducted by the welfare department in co-operation with the Western Institute for the Deaf also indicate a need for an education program to encourage people to seek medical help as soon as they suspect a hearing problem, Mrs. Dawson said.

The studies, still in progress, included the holding of two experimental hearing clinics at Alberni and Abbotsford.

Threads Program

A concert featuring the Don Gray Group will be a highlight of next week's activity program of the Esquimalt Branch, Silver Threads Service. The concert will be given at the Jubilee Hall Thursday at 1:30 p.m.

Monday's program has knitting and sewing classes set for 10 a.m., an oil painting class at 1:20 p.m., bowling and social hour.

Quilting and embroidery classes will be held Tuesday at 10 a.m. and a ceramic class at 1:30 p.m. A film showing will feature a tour of Britain.

The Glee Club will meet Wednesday at 10 a.m. A copper and novelty class will also be held. A whist drive is planned for 1:30 p.m.

Thursday's program will include a dance class at 10 a.m. A dance will be held Friday at 1:30 p.m. and a quilting class at 10 a.m.

Danger Signals Flying Over Municipal Scene

By JIM HUME

Inside City Hall

With 1970 hardly more than two weeks old, core municipalities are already looking askance at intermunicipal danger signals.

Hume

Over the past several years Oak Bay, Esquimalt, Saanich and Victoria have been drawn close together in their desire to solve common problems.

That's the way it should be.

Unfortunately, in the fading weeks of 1969 a cry went up like an echo from 20 years back. It was a cry for parochialism, and a cry thoughtful people hoped would be ignored.

ONE EXPLANATION

Some suggest the call for isolationism was endorsed so solidly by the people of Victoria that they gave the exponent of that philosophy a solid mandate as mayor.

That opinion is not shared here.

The solid mandate was handed to Mayor Courtney Haddock because the voters were just a little tired of having their mayors selected for them by the so-called establishment. Parochialism had nothing to do with it.

It was a year for reaction—and Victoria voters reacted.

REGRETABLE

While it is unfortunate that the "parochial" term was ever used, it is more unfortunate that it has been picked up by another mayor.

Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis, a man who not only does not believe in parochialism but works actively to promote intermunicipal co-operation, unhappily introduced the phrase into a recent rejection of a Mayor Haddock proposal.

True, Curtis said he regretted being forced into the "parochial" decision to refuse on behalf of his municipality a request from the city to share the operating expenses of the new Victoria aquatic facility.

The point is that the refusal could have been made without the use of the word at all. And there would have been no challenge to the Saanich stand because the suggestion wasn't too sound in the first place.

THE CHALLENGE

There is a challenge now, however. A challenge which Curtis, as the veteran politician in the area must face if he is to emerge as the strong man among the urban four.

It will be up to Curtis to curb his language when replying to the rookie in the quartet. It will be up to him to select his words carefully, answering firmly but kindly, even when the temptation to stand toe-to-toe and punch is strong.

It will be up to him to eliminate from his replies—and there will undoubtedly be many over the next two years—any words which promote the very parochialism he wants to avoid.

All that may seem a little harsh on Curtis. It isn't intended to be.

NEW DIRECTION

For years now, rightly or wrongly, Victoria mayors have been looked up to as the leaders in intermunicipal affairs. During the next two years that role of leadership must inevitably fall to Saanich—and to Curtis.

A good leader is firm but tolerant, especially when he knows that time and patience will bring its own conversion.

Curtis may well say he doesn't want the role of intermunicipal leader. But it isn't really a matter of wanting the job, is it? Time and place have just tossed it in his lap without so much as by your leave.

The president of the Union of British Columbia Municipalities; the chairman of the Capital Regional District Board; the chairman of the Capital Regional Hospital District Board; the mayor of Saanich, and the man who should be the chairman of Intermunicipal and of the Greater Victoria Water District, should be able to handle that extra role without too much effort.

While on Curtis let's make a strong point in his favor.

When the appointment of a funeral parlor operator to the Royal Oak Cemetery Board was challenged earlier this week Ald. Percy Frampton backed his anti-appointment stand with quotes from a letter written by Curtis.

DIDN'T BUTT IN

For the record Frampton asked Curtis for his opinion and should have so explained before reading any part of the document.

On the surface it looked as though Curtis was butting in where he had no right to butt in. That isn't so. Asked by an elected official for his thoughts on the appointment, he responded.

Had that small but important fact been known, Haddock's reaction (Saanich isn't going to tell us what to do) might well have been tempered.

While there will no doubt always be differences of opinion between Victoria and Saanich between Haddock and Curtis, both municipal governments and both mayors should start practising their diplomacy now.

Like it or not we're in the same bedroom even if we are not yet mature enough to share the same bed.

The bouquet of the week to jolly Ray Bryant, former mayor of Esquimalt. That isn't bad, stepping down from politics for a couple of weeks then hitting the headlines via an international great escape story.

Worthy of the highest praise is the fact that Bryant tossed in his services for free.

Tractor Import Intrigue Described

By IRVING C. WHYNOT

OTTAWA (CP) — A story of intrigue, legal manoeuvres and industrial spies at work in the night is told in the royal commission on farm machinery report released Friday.

It started when Ontario farmers decided they were paying too much for tractors. They set out to prove they could import them and save money, even after paying duty and freight costs.

* * *

At first, it was easy.

Then the companies started cracking down on their overseas dealers and roadblocks appeared at virtually every step.

Behind it all, the report says, was the attempt by manufacturers to control shipments to the Canadian market with its arbitrarily-high prices.

* * *

By mid-April, 1969, the federation and some of its country associations had imported about 150 British-made tractors.

To avoid interference by the British manufacturers, the association purchased them through farmer-agents in Britain who had contracted with individual farmers to buy them from dealers.

Thus the British dealer could claim that he was selling in good faith to a British farmer.

This worked for a time. But subsequent orders became more difficult as the companies became suspicious.

* * *

One order of 10 tractors from a Scottish representative was cancelled when a factory man noted that some of the specifications — such as broad tires and power steering — were not those usually used by local farmers.

Another order for six tractors was cancelled when its representatives overheard part of a conversation which disclosed that they were not for local consumption.

The commission report says no responsible British dealer would accept Canadian orders, and thus risk and prejudice his good relations with the manufacturer.

In a mid-1969 incident, the commission told of company efforts to track down the source of 13 tractors shipped to Hanover, Ont., from Manchester, England.

These tractors each had serial numbers in two places, which could "be used by the company concerned to identify the British dealer who had sold the tractor and the farmer who had bought it originally."

To protect these sources, the Grey and Bruce Federations of Agriculture arranged to have steel plates welded over the serial numbers.

When this shipment was being unloaded at Hanover, the report says, representatives of various farm machinery companies appeared to watch the proceedings.

* * *

"The next morning, a number of serial number 'cover plates' had been pried off, something which, the commission was assured, could not have been done with just a screwdriver. The plates were heavy enough to have required a wrecking bar as a lever to pry them up."

Strindberg Play At Langham Court

Encouraged by the outstanding success of its first collaboration with the University of Victoria Theatre Division, the production last season of the J. M. Synge comedy, Playboy of the Western World, Victoria Theatre Guild has entered into another team effort.

The play, which opens Jan. 31, at Langham Court, is Stindberg's compelling drama, The Father. Director is Wandalie Henshaw.

Playing opposite to each other for the first time in lead roles are Uvic's John Kirch and Patricia Wainman-Wood.

Others in the cast are Harriet Allen, Kim McCaw, Robert Price, Rod Symington, Jonathan Raitt, Kathy Ralphs and Valerie Stephenson.

Lowly Southampton Topples Everton

LONDON (CP) — Mike Chanon, one of England's rising young soccer stars, scored two goals today and and helped topple Everton from top place in the English League title race.

Channon's goals gave Southampton a sensational 2-1 victory over Everton. Leeds downed Coventry 3-1 and climbed above Everton into first place.

Leeds has 44 points from 29 games and Everton has 43 points from 28 games. Chelsea is third with 36 points from 28 games.

Southampton, struggling near the bottom of the standings, had not won a league game since Aug. 27. Its triumph was watched by 27,000 fans who squeezed into the little stadium, The Dell.

Victoria's Daily Newspapers Help You Sell Women's Wear Every Day of the Week!

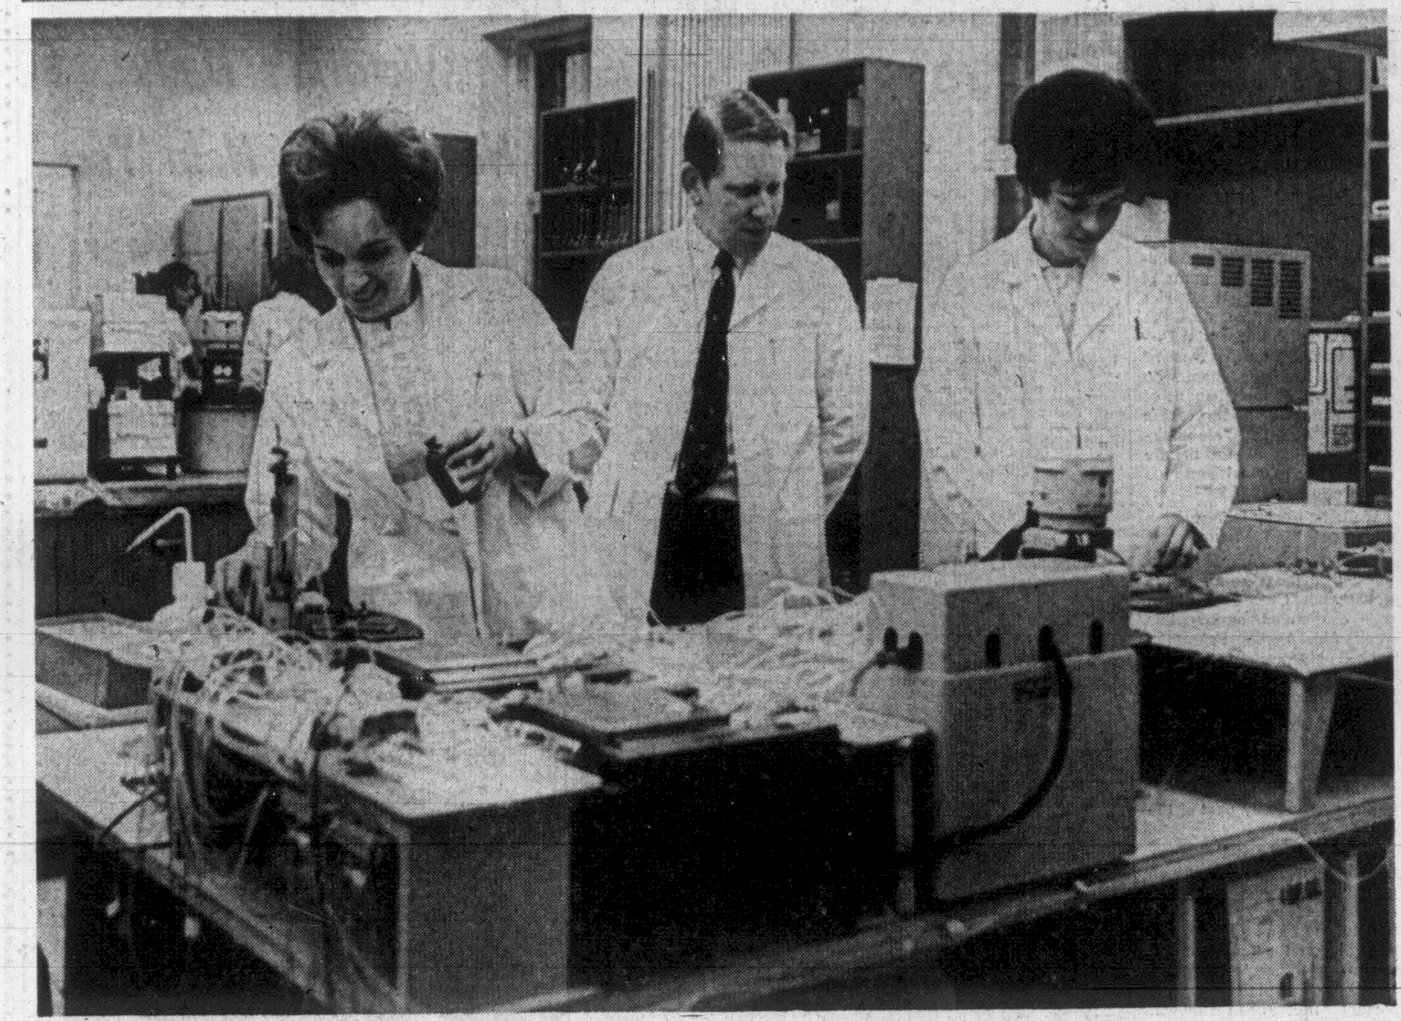
Victoria women love to shop. They love it so much they do it twice—first in the Victoria daily newspapers—then in their favorite stores.

They are constantly checking for fashion news in the popular women's pages. Then they watch the advertising to find out where to purchase the wearing apparel they want. Why experiment with media unproven in retail advertising; media with doubtful feminine readership; media which falls short of total coverage of your selling potential.

Why Settle For Less Than Your Customers' Favorite Daily Reading—the "Welcome Medium"

Victoria's Daily Newspapers

Of the total circulation of 71,000, over 61,000 copies of Victoria's daily newspapers are purchased by subscribers, metro area (DBS). A paper is delivered to virtually every home and apartment—women readers in vast numbers!



MIRACLE MACHINE that carries out 12 different tests on a single blood sample simultaneously every 30 seconds is one of many new pieces of equipment installed in the new Royal Jubilee Hospital laboratory. Associate director Dr. George Anderson oversees technologists Sandy Ascott (left) and Elizabeth Cross as they process one of an average 250 samples tested each day.

New Lab Boasts Latest Facilities

Four years of planning and two years of construction by stages culminated Friday when Provincial Secretary Wesley Black officially opened the Royal Jubilee Hospital's new laboratory on the fifth floor of the south wing.

●

Executive director of the hospital Dr. A. C. Pickles defined the laboratory as being second to none attached to any acute general hospital of Jubilee's size in North America.

Absent from the ceremony was Dr. Kenneth Thornton, director of pathology, who is in hospital with pneumonia.

Associate director Dr. George Anderson said the new facilities will help the hospital keep abreast of its laboratory work load which is increasing at the rate of 10 to 15 per cent each year.

The new laboratory cost $625,500 with the federal government contributing $80,000, the remainder being financed by the B.C. Health Insurance Service and the Regional Hospital District.

Final stage of the development will see the Wilson Laboratory, housed in a building on the grounds, updated.

A variety of new sophisticated electronic equipment has been installed in the new laboratory, designed to speed up and refine processing.

Among them is a Coulter Counter which makes seven simultaneous tests on blood cells, cutting down processing time to 30 seconds. Done manually, the test would take 30 minutes.

●

Another piece of equipment, the Auto-Analyzer cuts down process time from 20 minutes to 60 seconds, making 12 different tests on a single blood sample, all at the same time.

A special department has now been set up for cancer detection.

Located near the operating rooms, the fifth floor laboratory is equipped with an intercommunication system throughout in order to cut down time lost in an emergency situation.

Every precaution has been taken to safeguard the staff of 106. In every room there is an eye wash machine installed while several of the rooms are equipped with showers.

Dr. Pickles explained, "When chemicals are involved, water used immediately is much better than sending for a doctor."

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Shoplifting Pensioner Fined

A 65-year-old pensioner who cheerfully saluted the woman detective testifying against him in court Friday was fined $150 for shoplifiting.

"Thanks, sister," remarked George P. McLeod, 2842 Blanshard, to Mrs. Margaret Shook as he left the courtroom to pay his fine.

Mrs. Shook told Judge William Ostler she saw the accused take several items off the shelves of the Canada Safeway store, 1600 Hillside, Jan. 15, transfer them to his coat and leave the store without paying for them.

McLeod had pleaded guilty to taking the merchandise, worth $2.82.

Showing his appreciation for Mrs. Shook's diligence in apprehending him, McLeod extended his thank you, adding she was just doing her job.

William Basant, of no fixed address, was sentenced to six months in prison for possession of stolen property.

Basant had pleaded guilty when he appeared Jan. 8.

Police found the accused in a downtown hotel room Jan. 6 with coins and a 35 mm. camera that belonged to Lawrence Livingston.

Basant admitted he knew the articles, valued at about $83, to be stolen.

"I feel sorry for you," Ostler said in passing sentence.

"Life has used you rather poorly but you have a record of two similar offences."

★ ★ ★

"I am very sympathetic towards you," Ostler told Stephen J. Lambert, 20, of no fixed address.

Ostler sentenced the accused to six months definite and six months indeterminate on each of four counts of breaking and entering and theft and one count of entering with intent to commit theft, all to be served concurrently.

"In the formative years the guidance from parents was not there," Ostler added, pointing out that by sending Lambert to an institution with training facilities the accused could get the guidance and understanding missing so far in his life.

Lambert pleaded guilty to breaking into five Royal Oak homes Dec. 31, taking items from all but the last where he was scared off by a ringing phone.

Federick Morran Waller, 53, of 813 Lawndale, was fined $350 for impaired driving and his licence was suspended for four months.

He was driving a car south on Cadboro Bay about 2:30 a.m. Jan. 16 and hit a parked car, crossed the street and travelled through a chain-link fence before stopping in the Willows School yard.

★ ★ ★

Donald Alexander Robertson, 48, of Vancouver, was fined $300 for impaired driving and he was prohibited from driving for three months other than on business.

He was driving on the wrong side of Dallas with a flat tire Jan. 16 about 4:55 a.m. when he was stopped.

The flat tire was causing the car to veer across the street.

★ ★ ★

Charles E. Boyd, 39, of 724 Belton, was sentenced to 14 days in jail for impaired driving.

He was charged with the offence when he was stopped in a road check Oct. 24 on Esquimalt.

Boyd had a previous drinking-driving conviction.

★ ★ ★

David J. Neville, 21, of 151 Virago Crescent, was fined $350 when he pleaded guilty to impaired driving on Admirals about 12:40 a.m. Jan. 16 when he swerved across the centre line alomst hitting a police car travelling in the opposite diretion.

The trial of Allan L. Sawin, 22, of 3255 Glasgow, and Stephen P. Nichols, 20, of Berkeley, Calif., charged jointly with conspiring to traffic in hashish continued Friday.

Crown counsel Rodney Taylor called the customs officers who opened three packages declared as boxes of chocolates but in fact were boxes containing "a substance that did not look like chocolates."

A mail courier testified he delivered the boxes into the hands of the accused although the names were different than Sawin and Nichols.

RELIGION TODAY

The Church Faces Up to Youth

By LESTER KINSOLVING

"How do you explain the fact that youth are no longer accepting institutional religion?", appears to be a stock question whenever clergy are interviewed.

Rarely, however, are any symphony orchestra conductors or proprietors of art galleries ever asked to justify the relevance or significance of their occupations on the criterion of such appeal to juveniles.

And those clergy who worry about their ability to capture the attention of the young might recall the New Testament. For one of the very few teen-agers mentioned in this chronicle of the original Christian Church was Eutychus. And according to the 20th chapter of the Acts of The Apostles:

"And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen asleep in a deep sleep; and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft (story) and was as dead. And Paul went down and fell on him and embraced him and said 'Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him'."

There are few sincerely religious parents who would write off St. Paul simply because his preaching happened to put a teen-ager to sleep. Yet many of these same parents think that the Church is in mortal danger because it does not have the same appeal to all of the young as do such things as bubble gum and The Beatles.

(Many churches have tried to remedy this by staging such bizarre liturgical spectacles as jazzy Lord's Suppers — only to discover that while the stunt may cause teenagers to fill the church initially, the attraction doesn't last.)

Some denominations have a high rate of youth participation, usually because the family's entire social life is tied up with the church. But on the whole, teenagers are generally (and, considering their ages, understandable) too immature to have a very deep-seated interest in religion, or, for that matter, classical music.

Many devotees of classical music (operas and concerts now attracting larger audiences than baseball) now recognize that their appreciation of good music is due in large measure to teachers or parents who obliged them to attend concerts or listen to good music at home.

In religion, however, many such parents are unusually permissive. And, as one foreign observer has noted, "it is amazing how assiduously American parents obey their children."

Father Andrew Greeley, a Chicago sociologist, contends:

"There really isn't a generation gap in the United States. The so-called 'gap' is largely a fiction created by journalists and TV commentators so they have something to worry adults about, or to pontificate on when they make their nightly descent from Mt. Sinai. Despite the TV specials, picture stories in LIFE and frightening editorials in the daily press, most young Americans share — for weal or woe — the values of their parents. The serious social research on generational differences shows that they are rather small."

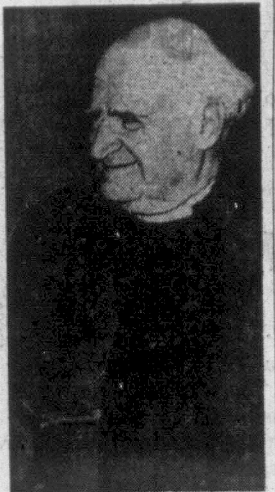
'VATICAN DOGMA BLOCKS UNITY'



RAMSEY

LONDON (AP) — The Archbishop of Canterbury says he sees no likelihood of uniting the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches unless Rome moves a long way from its dogma of papal infallibility.

The primate of the Church of England, Archbishop Michael Ramsey, said Friday in an interview with Church Times:

"On the 1970 definition alone, I doubt if union would be possiblible. But, if the collegiality context of the Pope's authority continues to grow within the Roman Catholic Church, the situation there may become different and the doctrinal balance different."

Collegiality, the concept that the Pope shares his powers with the bishops, was revived during the second Vatican council. The first Vatican council, which ended in 1870, proclaimed papal infallibility as a dogma of the Roman Church.

Regarding union with other churches, Dr. Ramsey expressed hope that proposals for an Anglican-Methodist merger would be brought back for further study. The Anglicans rejected such a union last year.

MOST PRIESTS CONTENT

Celibacy Not Major Issue

LONDON (AP) — A survey shows Roman Catholic priestly celibacy, subject of deep controversy in some European areas, faces little challenge elsewhere.

This month the Dutch Pastoral Council, a national body of clergy and laity, voted 90 to six in favor of ending obligatory celibacy. There were 100 abstentions — the bishop members of the council.

Pope Paul has called the rule against marriage an "incomparable treasure" of the church. In 1967 he rejected any change.

Recent surveys have shown 72 per cent of Dutch Roman Catholics, including clergy, want the rule abolished.

In a few European countries an increasing number of priests are giving up active office, many to wed. Four hundred left in Holland in two years; about 100 left last year in Britain.

MOST SAY LITTLE

But most of Europe's priests are content or at least silent. And most of those who have left say they would continue as priests if permitted to do so as married men.

Some bishops say many young men are adopting a wait-and-see attitude toward the celibacy question before committing themselves to the priesthood.

A West German magazine poll in several seminaries indicated that more than 90 per cent of those questioned opposed the unmarried life.

Munich's Action Circle — composed of priests, former priests and laymen — has published an end-celibacy request made to Julius Cardinal Doepfner, as chairman of the German Bishop's Conference.

The German news magazine Der Spiegel says about two-thirds of the priests it polled favored lifting the ban.

The number of priest dropouts in Italy is believed to have increased in recent years, especially in the south.

OFFICIAL POLL FAVORED

The only official poll on celibacy, carried out in Turin with approval of Michele Cardinal Pellegrino, showed that 465 priests who replied 304 favored admission of married men to the priesthood, with 76 unconditionally against. A total of 301 backed optional celibacy for priests, with 104 wanting it to remain mandatory.

In Austria, about 2,000 priests were asked for their views and "a considerable number" favored being allowed to marry. This showed up especially among priests under 50. Findings of the opinion poll, not disclosed in detail, have been sent to the bishops for study.

Church sources in France say that requests from priests to be allowed to marry rose to 116 in 1968 from 10 in 1962-63. There are 41,076 priests in France.

More conservative countries do not show the same unrest.

"The situation in Belgium is extremely quiet," said Msgr. Joseph Shoenmakers, auxiliary bishop in the Malines archbishopric. "The problem of course, exists but not with any acuteness now. But any decision in Holland would have possible consequences here."

The problem has hardly touched the Roman Catholic cantons of Switzerland. Spanish bishops have told their clergy that celibacy is here to stay.

Japan Urged To Assist Asia Growth

By STANLEY KARNOW

JAKARTA, Indonesia (WP)—Indonesian Foreign Minister Adam Malik Thursday called on Japan to create a "kind of Marshall Plan" to assist the countries of Southeast Asia in the period following U.S. disengagement from the region.

Speaking in an interview here, Malik described Japan as the "potential power" in the Far East. Therefore, he said, the Japanese ought to consider future "long-term arrangements" rather than "piecemeal" projects in the area.

In past statements, Malik has criticized the Japanese for treating Southeast Asia as merely a source of raw materials and a market for their industrial exports.

Malik also expressed the hope in the interview that the U.S. would continue to allocate "development aid" to Asia in the years ahead. But he rejected the need for a U.S. military presence, saying: "Vietnam has proved that this does not help."

Economic Co-operation Needed

At the same time, Malik added, the states of Southeast Asia must work more closely together in the future, particularly in the field of economic co-operation.

He recommended that the countries of the region, which produce such similar commodities as rubber, tin, copra and rice, co-ordinate in selling these raw materials to western markets.

A one-time newspaperman and former ambassador to Moscow, Malik was appointed foreign minister by President Suharto in 1966 after an abortive Communist coup d'etat led to the collapse of the Sukarno regime.

Since then, he has become a major exponent of Southeast Asian regional cohesion. Moreover, in contrast to the grandiose schemes promoted by the Sukarno regime, he has advocated realistic moderation in Indonesia's foreign affairs.

In his interview, for example, Malik dismissed the notion that Indonesia could serve as a leader of Southeast Asia because it is the largest and most populous country in the region. He said:

"A leader must have industrial strength. How can we, in our present condition, aspire to such a position? We can only think in terms of the area as a whole."

Kremlin Initiative Obscure

Commenting on the idea of a Russian-sponsored "collective security arrangement" for Southeast Asia put forth by Soviet Communist boss Leonid Brezhnev last June, Malik said that the Kremlin initiative appeared to be obscure.

"We all want to maintain peace in Asia," he said, "But nobody knows what Mister Brezhnev had in mind."

Turning to the question of relations with the Kremlin, Malik conceded that the problem of Indonesia's massive debt to the Soviet Union is still unsettled despite repeated negotiations between the two countries.

Indonesia owes the Soviet Union about 800 million dollars, most of it for military equipment purchased by the Sukarno government. The Indonesians candidly admit that they cannot repay the debt unless Moscow eases its terms.

Until now, however, the Russians have shown little inclination to accept an Indonesian proposal to stretch the payments over a longer period of time.

Malik disclosed Thursday that he may visit Moscow in February or March in order to discuss the debt question as well as the matter of renewed Russian aid for Soviet industrial projects that were started years ago and have been suspended. He also indicated Indonesia's willingness to resume active diplomatic relations with Communist China if Peking signalled its interest. Relations between Indonesia and China, while not officially ruptured, have been paralysed for the past three years.

Though trade between Indonesia and Taiwan has been growing steadily, Malik denied that he has any intention of moving toward the establishment of diplomatic relations with the Chiang Kai-shek government.

"We have already advised the Nationalists that we believe in a one-China policy," he said, adding: "Besides, Taiwan is only a small island."

While appealing for increased Japanese assistance in the future, Malik has made it clear in several recent statements that he is worried by the rise of Japan as an economic power in the Far East.

In an article published not long ago in "Asia Magazine," a newspaper supplement distributed throughout the region, he observed that Japan is the "object of envy, suspicion and fear among its Asian neighbors."

Communists Barred

JAKARTA (AP) — President Suharto has barred all former members and sympathizers of the outlawed Communist party and of other banned parties from voting or running in the general election scheduled for next year.

Freedom a Joy for David Jones

By ED GOULD
Times Staff

"I would like to thank the newspaper. My family thanks them too."

Those were the emotional words of David Jones, 18, who is home with his wife and children today, thanks to the generosity of an anonymous Saanich widow who paid for his release from Wilkinson road jail after reading of his plight in a Times article by John Mika Thursday.

"Home" is a two-bedroom shack on the Malahat reserve near Mill Bay which David and his wife and two children share with his wife's grandmother.

There was no welcome home party. And after Victoria lawyer J. Alan Bond, who represented the anonymous donor, left him there at 6 p.m. Friday, the glow of being free after 13 days in jail soon wore off.

David said today he is jobless, has no plans for the future, is unwelcome on the reserve because he is a Nanaimo Indian — and the Nanaimos are traditional enemies of the Malahats — and he's broke.

The only money in the house today was what David brought home with him, the 20 cents an hour earned "building things" at Wilkinson Road.

He plans to sell the 1959 Ford he bought for $133 — the car that landed him in trouble in the first place.

VISITED JAIL

Unable to pay for the new no-fault insurance and unable to get a licence, he wound up in jail after the car slipped its brake and backed into another parked vehicle in a Victoria shopping centre parking lot. Damage was $30.

He phoned his mother, Mrs. Virginia Casey, in Seattle and she promised, after visiting him in jail here, to try to raise some money to free him.

A brother, Harold Jones, 20, lives on Songhees reserve. He promised to pitch in too, but it would be difficult because a new baby had just been born and he was only working part-time.

The freedom money became unnecessary when the anonymous widow made her appearance on the scene. What is needed now, to put David Jones back on the road to respectability, is a job.

Born on a Nanaimo reserve, David went to Seattle with his mother when his parents broke up. His mother later remarried a non-Indian American and David attended school in Seattle until old enough to leave. He returned to Canada three years ago.

PICKING BERRIES

During a summer job of picking berries in Washington he met Ann. Later, he learned the girl had given birth to a baby boy, and he returned to Malahat to marry her.

It was a rocky marriage at the start. David admits he couldn't settle down, drank a lot, and was constantly in minor troubles with the police.

Ironically, the latest and most serious charge, came almost a year to the day from the time he gave up drinking. "He hasn't had a drink in a year and he sure has had lots of offers," his wife confirmed.

Ann has had a similarly difficult childhood. Her mother died last year, leaving her with seven brothers and sisters ranging in age from three to 15, as well as her own children, to look after.

The only time the couple ever saw a welfare official was when they arrived to take Ann's brothers and sisters away. They are now all together "and quite happy" in a non-Indian foster home in Duncan. "They come home on holidays," Ann said.

David said he would move off the reserve to take a job.

"I'll go anywhere and do anything," he said.

"I haven't much experience. The longest job I could get was at Mayo sawmill in Nanaimo and that was one day a week. I been fishing and picking fruit."

Political Isolation Irks the West

By PETER C. NEWMAN

They have sat there every night for 10 years now, the people of the three prairie provinces, watching the eleven o'clock news, and their nervous systems have been strained strained beyond endurance. The nightly procession of Canadian newsmakers have been interminably engaged with what Quebec wants and doesn't want, and nobody ever mentions the West. No wonder a farmer in southern Saskatchewan recently fired a shotgun into his own TV set as a hapless Liberal MP was trying to explain his government's policy on wheat sales.

Newman

The anonymous marksman was expressing in his own way the sense of frustration which has reached crisis proportions across much of western Canada.

Like the meeting and marrying of many drops of rain sliding along a wire to form one huge gusher, the various discontents felt by westerners have comined into a political force that must be taken into account in working out the delicate equations of our national future.

The roots of western dissatisfaction stretch back to the turn of the century when the western territories stuck the bargains that brought them into confederation.

Tariffs, freight rates and wheat sales were the issues then (as they are now), but during most of the first 50 years, the west at least felt that its complaints were being heard and that it possessed the political clout to make Ottawa sit up and listen.

Until the late fifties, national attention was focussed on the prairies and British Columbia with discoveries of the huge petroleum and gas fields, the carving out of the aluminium city at Kitimat, the building of the trans-Canada pipeline, the emergence of giant forest product complexes and discoveries of rich new mineral wealth.

But during the sixties, the focus of national concern shifted almost entirely to Ontario, where the nation's industrial future was being moulded, and to Quebec, where the struggle for national unity was being fought.

The West began to feel a deepening sense of isolation from the centres of national decision-making.

This mood of irrelevance grew particularly bitter after the defeat of John Diefenbaker and his prairie pro-consul, Alvin Hamilton.

Lester Pearson's Liberals never found—or searched very hard for—a prairie politician who could champion the western cause, and in the four general elections fought under Pearson's leadership, the Liberals won only six of the 192 prairie seats where they ran candidates.

It looked for a while as if this estrangement would end when Pierre Trudeau became the Liberal leader, and the three prairie provinces gave him 11 seats in the 1968 election.

But it now appears that the West misunderstood Trudeau's message.

JONES FUND GROWS

Everyone Wanted to Help

By JOHN MIKA

David Jones is free because many Victorians felt they were their "brother's keeper".

The 18-year-old father of two returned to his family after the supper hour Thursday after a race developed among donors to spring him from the Wilkinson Road jail.

The race was won by an anonymous Saanich widow who donated the outstanding balance of $252 of his sentence of three months in lieu of $285 in fines for two Motor Vehicle Act infractions Jan. 3.

Jones had already served 13 days of the term he began because he could not afford the fines levied for driving without the new compulsory auto insurance coverage and without a licence.

The Times and John Howard Society of Vancouver Island had organized a fund only hours before his release in response to an unexpected wave of callers. They phoned following publication of Jones' plight as an example of provincial laws which produce a systematic jailing of persons too poor to pay fines immediately and usually without any legal help for their confrontation with the prosecutor.

TWO LAWYERS

Before the edition announcing the fund had been distributed several individuals and organizations apparently had decided they would pay the fines themselves.

At least two lawyers acting on behalf of separate clients became involved in the race to release Jones and the London Boxing Club also joined it independently.

It was won by J. Alan Bond, a lawyer acting on behalf of an anonymous Saanich widow.

Lawyer Lloyd MacKenzie, acting on behalf of Mrs. Margaret Salt, 6469 Welch, was only a few minutes behind and the London Boxing Club's offer to pay the fines came shortly later. There were indications of other independent attempts but details were not known.

Bond drove Jones to his home on the Malahat Reserve after his release.

NO RECOMPENSE

John Howard Society executive director Michael Bennett offered to re-imburse the anonymous widow from the new-born public fund but Bond said she did not wish any recompense.

Meanwhile, the David Jones Fund continued growing, but at a slower pace, today even

Tariffs Said Bar To B.C. Growth

Province Potential Pacesetter

By ALAN WHITE

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Liberals were told Friday their province can set the pace for the development of the nation.

But first they must shake off trade and developments restrictions resulting from federal policies, delegates to the three-day provincial Liberal convention here were told.

Speeches by both provincial leader Dr. Pat McGeer and by federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis, MP for Capilano in North Vancouver, pointed the way to free trade and burgeoning development of B.C.

Mr. Davis said this province is the fastest-growing area in Canada and can set the pace for national growth as well as lend a style to the rest of the country.

He suggested an end to tariffs which protect Eastern Canadian industries but drive up prices in B.C. and impede industrial development.

IMPOSE HIGHER COSTS

The tariffs impose higher costs on developers here and "militate against greater mechanization and higher productivity . . . against further processing of our resources," Mr. Davis said.

Dr. McGeer said tariff barriers on most goods brought into Canada or shipped out "raise the prices for western consumers . . . and inhibit western manufacturing."

The solution, he suggested, is free trade for North America to give industry in B.C. better prices and thus a boost to development plans. It would also force Eastern Canadian industry to become more competitive.

"The west is undergoing its own quiet revolution," Dr. McGeer said. "It is the massive expansion of resource development and a thrust for manufacturing industry to complement it."

Dr. McGeer earlier said proposals in the federal white paper on taxation might aggravate the problem by cutting into development funds in the province.

MAY DEFLECT CAPITAL

The capital gains provisions of the white paper could deflect much-needed capital away from Canada, limiting the province's ability to compete in world markets.

"We do not have the protective tariffs of the industries of Eastern Canada," Dr. McGeer said. "We have got to hack it abroad."

Delegates punctuated his criticisms of tariff barriers to western development with loud applause.

WEATHER MILDER —LIGHT SNOW GONE

Temperatures will creep higher in Greater Victoria Sunday while the rest of the west shivers in a cold snap.

A touch of snow was reported in scattered showers locally today and the Gonzales weather office reported some freezing rain.

For Sunday the forecast is continued overcast and rain. The temperature will dip close to freezing tonight but climb to 40 Sunday.

Elsewhere, temperatures ranged to 45 below, establishing record lows at numerous points in Alberta and Saskatchewan. Prospects are dim for any moderation until after the current below-zero spell completes its second week.

A sample of overnight lows across the west:

Winnipeg, minus 35; Saskatoon, minus 41; Medicine Hat, minus 45; Calgary, minus 28 and Edmonton, minus 40.

Millionaire Leaves And Cheques Bounce

Times News Services

SCARSDALE, N.Y.—Millionaire Michael James Brody Jr. made a break for it today, leaving behind hundreds of fund-seekers. Many spent the night in freezing temperatures outside his Manhattan office.

As word spread that the 21-year-old oleomargarine heir had left — the guess was he was headed for a Caribbean island — the president of the Scarsdale National Bank and Trust Co. confirmed reports that Brody's chequing account balance was not sufficient to cover his cheque-writing activities of Friday.

A television newsman, Peter Simmons, who jokingly asked for $1,000, and got such a cheque, was told later by a bank officer they could not honor the cheque "at this time."

On Thursday, Brody first told the world that he had $25 million to give away and within hours the gold rush was on. He was besieged by visitors, telephone callers and telegrams requesting a piece of the action.

The telephone at Brody's rented $400,000 home here, whose number he took pains to publicize, has been changed to an unlisted number.

On Friday, Brody and his bride of 11 days, Renee, wandered around New York, passing out money to those who caught his fancy.

Requests ranged from cash to buy a helicopter to $25 to pay for a month's grazing for a horse.

Joseph Cassella, a "professional dynamite blaster", drove all night from Weirton, W. Va., to ask for $1 million. He said he needed the money to build a pig-iron melting plant that would provide jobs for Weirton.

SAILORS, WATER TYPHOID SUSPECTS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tests Friday revealed two sailors as possible carriers in the typhoid outbreak that swept the luxury P. & O. liner Oronsay.

Officials said the sailors are not ill but tests showed they are infected with typhoid.

Officials also reported Friday that the ship's water supply was contaminated. The water has been treated to overcome this contamination.

The number of persons in hospital increased to 30 Friday as 10 more were taken off the ship. So far only seven have been confirmed as having typhoid and the others are suspected cases.

In Victoria 21 persons reported they were aboard the Oronsay. They are being checked for typhoid but no cases have been discovered here to date. See also page 23.

42 RED-FACED ON PINK SLIPS

City traffic police today warned motorists to carry their insurance cards (pink slips) with them.

Forty-two drivers failed to produce their insurance cards at roadclocks on Bay Street and Gorge Road Friday.

Warning tickets were issued, but charges may be laid next time.

To simplyfy matters, Sgt. Albert Harwood suggested that drivers keep their licence, registration and insurance cards in one pocket book.

★ ★ ★

The roadblocks resulted in four drivers being charged with having no insurance. No drinking drivers were spotted.

A total of 70 other charges were laid for offences, such as no motor vehicle stickers, failing to change address, no driver's licence, violation of licence restriction and no chauffeur's licence.

Twenty-one warning tickets were issued to motorists who failed to produce the driver's licences, five to produce inspection stickers, and seven to produce registration slips.

MRS. AFFLECK
. . . austerity!!

'I COULD DIE IN HERE'

Flu Bug Wins the Battle of Room 115

By DON VIPOND

You could say that a tiny flu bug tackled the federal government's austerity program in Victoria last week—and won.

Scene of the battle was Room 115 of Canada Customs House, 816 Government, where Ottawa opened a citizenship office last spring.

●

For part of two days and all of a third that office was shut tight during regular hours and on the locked door a notice proclaimed:

"This office is closed until further notice due to illness."

The federal government shut down by sickness? Unheard of!

There were grumbles from the people who came to do business and couldn't. And rumbles from other staff in the building unable to refer people to the citizenship office.

But the most pungent comments came from Mrs. Laura Affleck. Because she is the staff of one—to advise applicants, write letters, answer the phone daily from 8 to 4:30, including lunch hours.

●

"I could die in here," she said from her office this week while still racked by the flu. "I should be in bed but there's just no way of staying home."

For two days Mrs. Affleck dragged herself to work, only to have to quit at noon. Then last Friday she stayed off all day and spend the weekend in bed too.

A veteran of 10 years with the citizenship court in Vancouver, she suggests that the government's austerity kick has kept it from hiring the one or two extra staff needed locally.

While the work day is supposed to end at 4:30, she says she rarely gets away before 5:30. Her lunch hour is one of the office's busiest times as others use their lunch hour to do business with her.

It's even tough to get away to the washroom for a few minutes. A coffee break is only a dream.

●

To top it off, this past week has been the busiest by far since the office opened.

So. Mrs. Affleck got on the phone to her boss in Vancouver. She doesn't want that conversation quoted but her message must have been pretty plain.

An assistant is scheduled to arrive Tuesday from Ottawa.

Ship Shuffle By Ex-Mayor

An emergency switch of ships has been made by former mayor Hugh Stephen and Mrs. Stephen.

They have been standing by in Vancouver waiting to board the typhoid-stricken P. & O. liner Oronsay for a two-month cruise.

They left vancouver Friday afternoon en route to Hawaii on board the Oronsay's sister ship, Oriana.

They will wait there until the Oronsay arrives. Their daughter Susan said today they expect the waiting period to be two or three weeks.

Health board officials say 21 Greater Victorians who were aboard the Oronsay have reported for tests.

Sluggish Start For Olah Fund

Contributions to a fund set up to help pay expenses incurred and money lost by Nick George Olah are coming in slowly Nels Granewall, University of Victoria financial aid officer, said today.

He said, however, the slow start doesn't represent the attitude of the public.

He said many persons have written sympathetic letters.

Olah, 21, fled the United States last week with his wife Linda in an elaborately planned escape. A Canadian citizen, he faced draft evasion charges in the U.S.

The fund was established Thursday to raise a minimum of $3,000 to cover expenses including $1,000 bail forfeited when the Olahs left the U.S., $750 in college tuition fees turned over to their American lawyer, $800 loaned to Norman Wright, Uvic student council president who organized the rescue, and $700 covering articles pawned by Olah for living expenses.

Tony Hodge, a fund trustee at UBC, is also collecting money.

The Vancouver Sun and the Victoria Daily Times jointly paid the Olah's $500 for the exclusive first story of their flight. The arrangement was made by the newspapers after the couple had arrived in Victoria and was not a factor in their decision to leave the United States.

Gov't Won't Budge On Finance Formula

Mediocrity Feared By Board Chairman

An unyielding government spending policy means growing school districts are doomed to mediocrity, the chairman of the Greater Victoria school board said today.

He was commenting on word from Education Minister Donald Brothers Friday that no changes are planned in B.C.'s controversial education financing formula.

School boards will still have to take their case to the people for operating expenses above the formula limits, Brothers told the Times.

And he has written all school boards to warn them there will be no concessions.

● ● ●

Last year the department of education approved some additional grants after a handful of school boards submitted extra spending plans to ratepayers and had them turned down.

Brothers' statement amounts to a rejection of requests by the B.C. School Trustees' Association for a change in the formula, particularly its referendum requirement.

James Campbell, president of the BCSTA, had expressed optimism changes would be made after a meeting with the provincial cabinet earlier this month.

The formula can lead to a referendum where a school district exceeds 110 per cent of the basic education program, set by the government on a provincial average basis.

● ● ●

Jameson said today that rural school districts which find themselves growing rapidly into urban centres are the ones which will suffer most from the formula.

"As they grow they won't be able to implement the programs demanded of urban boards."

Youngsters needing special counselling, for example, will probably not get it.

Jameson said the indication at the moment is that the Greater Victoria board "with a reasonable amount of restriction" will be able to come up with an operating budget this year within the formula limit.

Several factors could change the picture in the future, he said. Probably the major one is salaries, for administration and teachers.

If the wage bill takes a major jump, either through bargaining or arbitration rulings, "it could make it very difficult to operate."

BIDS CALLED ON PAT BAY REBUILDING

Tenders have been called for reconstruction of almost three miles of the Patricia Bay Highway to freeway standards.

Bids will be made public Feb. 3 and work is expected to take several months.

The 2.95 mile stretch, from Rogers Avenue to Cherry Tree Bend, will be built to four-lane divided highway standards with overpasses.

Heavy traffic on the stretch of road is likely to slow construction progress.

'Enforce Law On Firearms'

The B.C. Federation of Agriculture has asked the provincial government to enforce its Firearms Act prohibiting persons to carry firearms — guns, revolvers and rifles — without a permit.

Federation manager Richard Stocks said farmers feel rigid controls for the carrying of firearms was in the interest of society.

"I believe 90 per cent of the people of this province are in favor of strict controls," he said. "But nothing is being done to enforce the act."

Time and again, he said, farmers have run across drivers with guns, rifles and revolvers in their cars. Their owners were without permits.

★ ★ ★

He said children with .22 rifles and shooting at wildlife indiscriminately was not an unfamiliar scene in the province.

"A .22 rifle is one of the most dangerous weapons," he said. "Many people think it is practically harmless because the bullet is small. But it can kill."

Stocks said farmers have been bothered by people wandering across their lands with guns.

"The trouble if you don't crack down on firearms, gun carrying will creep in — just as it has in the United States," he said.

Here's Handy Dandy Gadget When the Big Switch Comes

By AB KENT

Arnold R. Detrick can hardly wait for the day a foot becomes 30.48 centimeters (or centimetres), or 3 15-16 inches becomes 100 millimeters (millimetres).

He has been ready for Canada's switch to the metric system for some time, and his frequent thoughts about the coming snarl of changing English linear measurement to French millimeters, centimeters, meters and kilometers have resulted in the Metriputer.

His copyrighted conversion guide, or Metriputer, works like a slide rule to change inches and feet accurately into their metric equivalents, and vice versa.

CHANGES STARTED

Detrick notes that hospitals have begun the changeover here, and in Britain the switch is on in the form of new pence in the money system.

Friday in the House of Commons Canada's Trade Minister Jean-Luc Pepin tabled a white paper endorsing metric conversion, a move hailed by the Conservative opposition.

Detrick's guide is a basic instrument dealing in inches-to-metric primarily. It does not provide for yards and miles but there are a few handy equivalents printed on the face and rear of the Metriputer, such as one yard equals .9144 meters; one kilometer equals .6214 land miles equals .53 land miles; one nautical mile equals 6,076.115 feet.

The inventor, now is "74½," retired in 1960, a former builder in San Francisco. He and his wife arrived here—almost on spec—two years ago.

"We just got tired of the big city," he said, explaining that about 38 years ago he had spent an hour here and the impression remained with him.

"So when we decided to move from San Francisco, I said 'Let's go to Victoria,' and we've adopted Victoria as our home."

KEPT BUSY

His invention has kept his mind busy ever since.

"When I got interested in the difference between inches and centimeters, I couldn't find a satisfactory ruler or direct-reading slide rule, and one thing led to another," Detrick recalled.

At this time he is not interested in marketing the rights.

"I would rather be active myself," he explained.

So he is turning out a few at a time by hand, using steel venetian blind stock for the body. He is looking into the use of photosensitive aluminum for reproducing a wear-resistant scale.

Ultimately, the device probably will be mass-produced. At least Detrick hopes demand for the Metriputer will necessite assembly line methods.

And that will be his contribution to his adopted home.

And for Cooks, Just Forget It

By PAT DUFOUR

The federal government's bid to convert to the metric system threatens to throw a whammy into many an amateur cook's repertoire.

Deciphering today's recipes into the updated parlance will demand the mental agility of a mathematical genius:

"Take a cup of flour (that's 284 millimetres), add two tablespoons of sugar (let's see, it says here one tablespoon is 17.758 cubic centimetres) . . ."

It's enough to make any young bride or kitchen-dabbling hubby throw his pots and pans out of the window.

★ ★ ★

Luckiest of all are those haphazard hash-makers who prefer to rely on a little dash of instinct . . . an extra pinch here, another little spot of seasoning there.

They can ignore the threat of coming mathematical gyrations.

But for the many whose culinary expertise is dependant on following a recipe down to the last crossed T, the proposed switch is bad news.

Their goose may very well be cooked.

Arthur Mayse . . .

STAFFERS AT THE SPCA Animal Shelter on Napier Lane need no clock to tell them that the home-from-work scramble has begun. A phone rings, and the voice at the other end reports that a dog, or more rarely, a cat, has been hit by a car.

Other such calls may follow before the rush is over.

The life led by man's best friend in the city is not necessarily a happy one, says shelter manager David Beeching, who sees dogs by the hundred come and go each year.

★

Take the matter of life-expectancy, for instance. Canine statistics give the country dog a normal expectancy of 15 years. But transfer him to town and his span is drastically reduced.

Traffic hazard and pesticides help pull it down. The big-city dog is ahead of the average if his lifetime exceeds a mere four and a half years.

At this point, I asked Beeching whether any trends are readable from the Shelter ebb and flow.

"Not just from that," he said, to a bow-wowed accompaniment from one of his guests. "I've been relating the dog to his society for 50 years."

★

There's a strong present trend toward the "city dog".

He's small, and where living space is limited, that's a governing factor. Increasingly, those who come dog-seeking to the shelter lean on it.

The beagle, corgi or dashshund which winds up at the shelter isn't likely to linger there. Also, a standard question now asked about a pup is, 'How big will he be when he's grown?"

However, not everybody wants a small dog, and an outer suburban trend seems to indicate that the fear of violence so prevalent among middle-class Americans is seeping into Canada.

"There's a tendency for men working in the city but living a little way out to want German shepherds," Beeching told me. "What they're after isn't so much a pet as a guard dog that will protect their wives when they're away."

Advice sometimes offered is to get a goose instead. A goose in the yard can be counted on to set up a warning clatter if a stranger encroaches on its territory. It can also display daunting hostility toward strangers.

The shelter people have a pretty sound gauge of the trend toward apartment living from the incidence of callers with the same sad tale to tell.

★

'We're moving into an apartment,' it runs, "and we can't take our dog with us. So we decided the best thing to do was find him another home. We don't want to, but . . .

Here a shrug and a sigh, and maybe a hand dropped to caress a furry head.

In terms of popularity and demand, the poodle has displaced all other breeds. He's the intelligent clown of dogdom, to quote Beeching, and when untoward circumstance brings a poodle to the shelter, its stay is short.

★

From poodles, we moved on to consider the folly of spoiling dogs, who take advantage of such coddling to reverse the normal process and boss their masters. This was a delicate topic, and I ducked from under it with a change of subject.

I pointed out that even the most biddable male dog is inclined to take off for parts unknown when the breeze wafts a scent equivalent to "Temptation', 'Ambush', or 'Evening in Paris'.

Quite so, Beeching agreed, and the shelter is speedily made aware when that condition exists.

One bitch in heat will bring in as many as 25 protesting calls a day from nearby residents, who find the neighborhood dog population suddenly doubled or trebled.

Pills can be bought that will ease this situation, and the shelter maintains a shared-cost spaying program in which 193 owners of female dogs co-operated last year.

The owner pays half the cost of the operation, and the shelter takes care of the rest. Result, a decrease in the number of unwanted pups in need of homes, and fewer complaints from outraged gardeners.

★

Meanwhile, I see by the clock that it's 4:30 of a dullish afternoon.

In the next half-hour, it's probable that someone at the shelter will answer a ringing phone, and learn that a pet on the loose has been reduced to a minor statistic.

For a pooch at large in the city, it's a dog's life!
